A LIFE'S EPILOGUE.

I turn the tiny key and scan with care
My reliquary's treasure unbeholden.
I tell their tale, those hoarded locks of hair,
The sheeny black, the silver gray, the golden.

What envy I yon singers, lofty throned,
Who voice each mood in life's eternal poem?
No sweeter love than mine their lips have moaned,
They sang their songs—but I have lived my poem.

—Grant Allen.

SOUL FRIENDS.

They had been mutually attracted at once. At least, so Sada fondly believed. It was not hard for Sada to believe a thing when she wanted it to be so.

"He isn't at all my ideal man physically," she explained to her cousin Tom. She was telling him, because he was the only person she knew to whom she could talk with absolute freedom. The fact that Tom loved her did not interfere with their friendship. She made a business of forgetting all about Tom's love. She had a happy faculty for forgetting everything she wanted to forget.

"He is little, round shouldered and not the least bit in the world handsome, but, oh, how my soul goes out to him!" she sighed.

"Tom, dear," she went on after a little, touching her cousin's cheek caressingly, "do you believe in reincarnation?"

"I've never thought about it," Tom answered. That touch of Sada's hand had made his heart beat wildly in spite of her frequent assurance that her caresses were only given him in a sisterly way.

"Hendrick and I must have been twins in another life. How else could we have known each other so well from the first?" Sada mused.

"And when are you going to marry him?" asked Tom in a husky voice, which he tried to make sound matter of fact.

Sada looked at him pathetically.

"How can you, Tom? I should think you would know I did not mean anything of that sort. I'm disappointed in you, Tom. Such a thing as marriage has never been mentioned between Hendrick and me and never will be!"

Tom was silent a moment, then inquired in a hesitating way, as if he were not quite sure how she would take his question:

"Did you ever pat his cheek as you did mine a moment ago?"

A rush of color came into Sada's face.

"Of course not," she answered emphatically. "I'm not given to doing such things. Only there is something about your silly old face that tempts me when I am with you, but with Hendrick it is different. It is his soul that I care for."

Tom's first expression of relief was followed by one of mournfulness. What if Sada did speak in this way now? Of course she would be betrothed soon to the man whose soul had attracted hers.

A season passed, during which daily letters were exchanged between the soul friends. As the hour approached for them to meet again Sada could hardly wait for it.

"Tom, dear, I am so happy! I have been counting even the minutes," Sada said, when her faithful cousin put her in the car that was to take her to Summer Vale Springs, the trysting place.

"Aunt Lucy was slightly indisposed yesterday, and I almost killed her with attention for fear she would not be able to travel today," she added. "Now, kiss me, Tom, and hurry away, or you may be carried off when the train starts."

When Tom stood on the platform beside her window, she cried out:

"Smile! How dare you look solemn, you selfish boy, when I'm so happy?"

The journey was very trying. She couldn't read, and there was no Tom to talk to. Aunt Lucy was no company. She was too poor a traveler.

When Summer Vale Springs was reached, the soul brother was at the depot to help Sada off. She gazed jealously into his face, but did not tell him how she had counted the hours.

Then began those delightful talks and walks. So much new music had to be conned, so many new books discussed. One day Sada made an unusually becoming toilet and asked Hendrick cautiously how she looked. He studied her attentively, and she found herself waiting breathlessly for his answer.

That night she wrote to poor, long suffering Tom: "Our friendship—Hendrick's and mine—is more ideal than ever. It is so soul satisfying." And Tom sighed as he said to himself, "She will tell me of her engagement in her next letter."

At the end of the first week Sada said to Hendrick:

"I am making the most of my time—getting all of your life that I can. Soon you will tell your love to one of the many girls who cross your path, and she may object to our friendship." As she listened for his answer her heart almost ceased to beat.

"No," Hendrick said slowly, "I don't think I shall. It is probable that I shall never marry."

That night Sada cried herself to sleep. The next morning she tried to find out why she had cried.

"It is because I am a woman, and women are senseless about some things," she told herself furiously.

A few days later Alice Baudret arrived at the Springs. Hendrick remarked that she was one of the most beautiful girls he had ever seen. A dreadful pain shot through Sada's heart, and she fell into the clutches of the demon jealousy for the first time in her life. She had never liked Alice, voting her "a stupid," but now she cultivated her society assiduously, to the great delight of the fair girl, who had always longed to be more intimate with "clever Miss Sada."

One day Hendrick and Alice were discovered rehearsing a vocal duet from a piece of sheet music belonging to Sada. For awhile Sada felt moved to do Alice some serious injury, but instead she simply burned the printed score when next she could lay hands upon it.

"I wonder if I could wound Hendrick as he wounds me?" Sada mused one evening, and then and there resolved to put the matter to the test with the first attractive newcomer at the Springs. The necessary victim arrived in the person of Frederic West, one of Hendrick's old and tried friends.

West was an Adonis, and admiration was lavished on him everywhere, but he fell into the trap Sada laid for him, and no wonder. Sada was noted for her powers of fascination. The Springs saw the other side of it. The gossips said that "Miss Banks was caught at last."

Hendrick looked on for some time in silence. Then he gave his one sign. With his eyes calmly fixed on Sada's he said:

"You are only playing with Fred, but he is in earnest." And Sada's heart grew heavy and hopeless. West was no longer encouraged. Stung by the change in her manner, he loved her more wildly than ever.

One evening Sada slipped quietly into the music hall. It was apart from the hotel and cottages—a place Hendrick frequented of late when the rest of the company were busy with their own amusements elsewhere. He loved to seat himself at the piano and let his fingers wander over the keys as they would in the gathering darkness. "I must hear him play when he fancies he is all alone. Perhaps I may find out something he is hiding from me," she whispered as she stole into the room and concealed herself in a dark corner.

Soon Hendrick came in. Ah, how he played! And as Sada listened and listened her soul thrilled in response to the music. The small cares of life fell from her shoulders. Every lofty ambition she had ever cherished came back and possessed her. She was filled with a beautiful new joy. She longed to go to Hendrick, to put her arms around his neck, to say "I know! I know!"

Some one came into the hall, and Sada shrank farther back into her dark corner. The intruder was Frederic West.

"Old fellow, I want to ask you something," West said to his friend. "You know how I love Sada Banks. Why has she changed so suddenly? What makes her hold me at such a distance now?"

At the sound of his voice Sada was stirred with a deep shame for what she had done. It had been so cruelly unnecessary, so unworthy of her better self! Then she listened, with every nerve on edge. What would Hendrick say? Was this to be the hour of her triumph? Would Hendrick frankly explain that he was hers, and she was his?

"Fred," Hendrick answered gently, "forgive me for what I am about to tell you. I cannot say the same things to any other man, but you will understand me. Sada Banks has led you on, thinking to avenge herself upon me. She would do anything to make me suffer. She loves me. She will wreck her whole life one day because she loves me!"

A fierce anger took the place of shame in Sada's heart. Oh, what would she not give if she could strike down this man who had laid bare the weakness of her soul to another. As West left the hall she went quickly to Hendrick.

"I heard all that you told that man about me," she said in a voice so frigid that she shivered as she spoke. "It may be just as well for your self love to tell you now that you are in error; that I do not care for you in the least. I never did. I have only amused myself playing at friends with you, just as I have amused myself making your friend love me! Why," and she forced a laugh, with only a mockery of merriment in it, "I have been for years the promised wife of my cousin, a good man, a man of honor. The day for our wedding is already fixed."

Perhaps it was her laugh that betrayed her, or perhaps it was the better view of her face which the first beams of the rising moon gave him at that moment, but Hendrick knew that she had lied.

The next day she stood before him to say farewell. He looked intently into her face as though reading it. She carried his look with her until she died.

"What did he mean to say to me?" she sobbed as the train hurried her away from him. "What did he mean?" she asked herself again when, two days later, she stood beside Tom and called heaven to witness that she would love, honor and obey him till death should part them one from another.

Foolish, happy Tom! She said to him the moment they met, "If you will marry me tomorrow, you may," and he had taken her at her word.

"What did he mean?" she asked herself again and again as the years went by. She is asking it yet. One day, when she is born into that other life, where souls know as they are known, she may cease to ask it, but not till then.

Meanwhile she is not unhappy. Good, faithful Tom walks beside her and smooths her way. Tiny arms twine themselves about her neck. Prosperity attends her. It is only the ever present question that keeps her just a little short of satisfaction.—Kate Field's Washington.

Just Like a Man.

Mrs. Somebody, who lives in Thirteenth street, has an infant son who is just beginning to walk. Last week he fell down stairs, so his mother bought a gate to put at the top of the stairs. There is a little metal socket screwed to each side of the stairs, and the gate fits into these. It was put up one day—Wednesday, I think. It was Mr. Somebody's night at the lodge, and Mrs. Somebody remembered after he had left the house that he had not been told of the gate. She was so exercised for fear he would fall over it when he came in that she sat up for him. He was late, very late, and she was very tired. And yet when he did come, and realized how devotedly she had waited up in order to save him a tumble, what do you think the heartless man said?

"Why, my dear," said he, "why didn't you just lift the gate out?"

Wasn't that just like a man?—Washington Post.

HOW TO AVOID COLDS.

A CLAIM THAT THEY ARE LARGELY DUE TO FLANNELS.

Have Your Underclothing Light and Loose and Keep Up Your Natural Heat—Colds Are Responsible For a Great Deal of Illness and Should Not Be Overlooked.

A physician who has given much thought to the hygiene of clothing has come to the conclusion that many deaths are caused by heavy woolen underclothing.

It can be proved that flannels are often the cause of severe colds. To have a cold is to be in a diseased condition, and that means a loss of vitality and a shortening of life. It may even mean sudden death.

One can easily demonstrate in one's own person on a small scale the ill effects of excessive flannels. Bind your hand in thick woolen bandages and leave it in that condition for a night. In the morning you will find it damp and flabby, the pores all open. It is in the most susceptible condition for catching cold. If the whole body were brought to the same state, the result of exposure to cold air would inevitably be disastrous.

That the whole body is often brought to a nearly similar condition is certain. The majority of people during the winter incase themselves in heavy, tight woolen or flannel garments. These provoke perspiration and do not absorb it. The result is that the wearer's skin is hot, damp and highly susceptible to the inflammatory effects of cold. A slightly lowered temperature can hardly fail to bring on a cold.

Heavy woolen underclothing is able to do all the more harm because it has the weight of ancient domestic tradition. Few people dare to be wiser than their grandmothers. Woolen underclothing, according to modern experience, should be as light as is consistent with comfort. There are many persons who go through the winter healthily in cotton underwear, and these are probably the most fortunate class of the population. But the warmth preserving qualities of wool are not to be ignored.

One of its great properties is that it is a bad conductor of heat. The heat of the body, therefore, is not given out by it. It also does not stick to the skin and does not absorb perspiration freely. This is a quality of doubtful value. While it is agreeable not to have your underclothing glued to your skin it is injurious to carry a deposit of moisture which may become cold and do harm in all parts of the body.

The object, therefore, should be to wear underclothing which does not cause excessive perspiration. It should be light and loose. Wool is apparently the best material for the majority of people.

The subject of colds receives too little attention. Many people are resigned to the perpetual possession of them. They should be regarded as disease dangerous, offensive and unclean. Patent medicine advertisements print eloquent descriptions of their final effects. These remarks are applicable to those who have neglected themselves too long and are fit subjects for the hospital or prolonged medical treatment. A wise attention to clothing and the general health is more valuable than all remedies and treatment.

Colds are probably the chief cause of illness and disease among human beings. They give little trouble to animals, who wear no clothing. Arguing from these facts, some enthusiasts would say that the less clothing you wear and the more you expose yourself the healthier you will be.

But a state of civilization of considerable antiquity has made it necessary for man to preserve his natural heat by artificial means. It is not permissible to abandon clothing entirely in this country. Nor is it advisable to wear as little as the public authorities will permit during an American winter.

Neither warm clothing nor artificial heat will satisfactorily replace the natural heat of the body. To preserve this should be the first aim of all who wish to avoid colds. Good food, fresh air and exercise are obviously the principal means.

In the care of the body the skin should take an important place. As far as colds are concerned it is all important, because they rarely occur unless the skin is in a certain condition.

When the pores of the skin are opened, the cold air enters where it is not wanted and causes an inflammation. In cold weather the pores should be closed.

Cold water is an excellent vehicle for closing the pores. The weight of experience seems to prove that it is better to use warm water first. Much depends on the individual constitution.

The warm water cleanses and softens the skin and relieves the body of superfluous moisture, the frequent source of colds. Following this, the cold water will close the pores and put the skin in a sound, normal condition. No one should stay in cold water long enough to feel discomfort.—New York World.

A Piazza Cushion.

For piazza use at a seaside cottage, where sunshine and sea breeze abound, nothing can exceed the appropriate loveliness of the "sea dragon pillow." It is made up in the usual size—18 inches by 18 inches square. The covering is of sea green satin, that reproduces in effect the very sheen of the water in sunlight. The design upon the face of the cushion is a sea dragon drawn in exquisite curves and sweeps, and wrought in silver and gold Japanese cord couched down, with white and yellow silk thread. The embroidery sparkles and glints from the green background. A five inch double ruffle of satin, overset with a four inch fall of fish net spangled in silver and gold, completes the tout ensemble. This design will recommend itself in cheaper stuffs, green crepon or denim, or a fish net and little fishes afloat in water hues may be readily drawn upon the material and worked in, in Japanese gold and silver cord, and couched into place.

A TOLSTOI ANECDOTE.

How the Author Treated a Publisher Who Did Not Know Him.

The following characteristic little story of that eccentric genius, Count Leo Tolstoi, is communicated to our Odessa correspondent by a Moscow journalist. After completing one of his recent short works the count went in search of a new publisher. He appeared one forenoon in the publishing office of a magazine where he was personally unknown. He was dressed after the manner of a better class manzhik, and the chief of the establishment, probably given to judging from appearances, was not over polite or patient in listening to the count's request to have his sketch published, at the same time taking the manuscript from his pocket.

"Oh," said the publisher, "I really cannot be bothered. It is no use my looking at your sketch. We have hundreds of such things in hand and have really no time to deal with yours, even though you were in a position to guarantee the cost, which I very much doubt."

Tolstoi slowly rolled up his manuscript, and replacing it in his pocket observed:

"I must be laboring under some misapprehension. I have been told that the public likes to read what I write."

"The public likes to read what you write!" exclaimed the publisher, closely scrutinizing him. "Who are you? What is your name?"

"My name is Leo Tolstoi."

The astonished and abashed publisher was instantly on the other side of the counter, expressing the most profuse apologies and entreating the count to do him the distinguished honor of permitting him to publish the sketch. Tolstoi quietly buttoned up his coat with the manuscript in his breast pocket, saying: "You have no time, you say, having so many hundreds of these things in hand. I must find a publisher who has time, and one who will not require a guarantee. Dasvidanya!" And the count walked off in his usual nonchalant manner.—London News.

HE WANTED TO KNOW.

But the Sporting Editor Found the Question Too Deep For Him.

"Is this the place where they answer questions?" asked the rough looking man as he entered the little back room in a newspaper office.

"There's a man on the staff who makes a bluff at doing it," said the sporting editor, "but he isn't here now."

"Oh, well, maybe you'll do," said the stranger.

"We don't answer verbal questions," protested the sporting editor. "Write your questions out and send them in."

"It isn't much of a question, and I thought perhaps you"—

"Oh, I don't know where the reference books are," interrupted the newspaper man.

"They wouldn't do you any good anyway," said the stranger. "This isn't a book question; it's an up to date, modern one. It's timely, you understand."

"Well, then, fire ahead. I may know something about it."

"It's about the new woman"—

"Stop there!" cried the sporting editor. "That's clear out of the sporting department."

"No, it isn't," protested the stranger. "The bloomer girl belongs to that department along with the bicycles, doesn't she?"

"Maybe she does," replied the sporting editor. "I hadn't thought of that. Go ahead."

"Well, you see, I'm a street car conductor."

"Yes."

"And I want to know if the bloomer girl will get off the car backward like the"—

But the sporting editor had thrown up both hands as an intimation that the problem was clear beyond him.—Chicago Post.

The Banavia Flea.

All tourists in the highlands know Banavia. They may not know why a lobster is, in the west highlands, called "a Banavia flea." From a book referred to we gather that a good many years ago an American was stopping at the Banavia hotel, and he made himself very obnoxious by his contemptuous remarks on Scottish scenery. "Ben Nevis," he said, "do you call that a mountain? You should see our mighty Rockies! Loch Linnhe! Do you call that a lake? You should see our Lake Superior!" and so on. The highland waiter was exasperated, and procuring a live lobster he secreted it, in requital of the insults, in the American's bed. Hardly had the American gone to sleep when the lobster caught him firmly by the toe, and he jumped out of bed with a yell and rang for the boots. "Boots," he said solemnly, rubbing his toes as he spoke, "you may not have such big mountains and big lakes here as we have in the states, but you have the most tarnation big fleas I ever experienced."—London Paper.

Shy Great Men.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe tells two new anecdotes of the shyness of literary men—one of Hawthorne, of whom such anecdotes are common, and the other of Irving. Irving, she says, attempted to make a speech at a dinner given to Charles Dickens, but after mumbling a few words indistinctly he remarked, "I can't go on," and sat down. Of Hawthorne's timidity she had a glimpse while calling with her husband on Mrs. Hawthorne in Concord. While they were in the parlor they saw a tall, slim man come down the stairs, and Mrs. Hawthorne called out: "Husband, husband! Dr. Howe and Mrs. Howe are here." Hawthorne bolted across the hall and out through the door without even looking into the parlor.

At the Boarding House.

Boarder—What's that noise out there? Somebody beating a carpet?

Landlady's Husband—No, it's Jones trying to beat his board bill, and my wife is onto him.—Detroit Free Press.

GOLD EATING WATER

SPARKLING LIQUID CHARGED WITH CYANIDE OF POTASSIUM.

Millions In the Yellow Metal Recovered by Percolation—A Simple but Interesting Process, With Results Which Are Nothing Less Than Marvelous.

It is not generally known, even in California, that millions of dollars in glittering gold are annually taken from rude heaps of base looking quartz by the gentle flowing of crystal water over huge piles of broken rocks that contain the precious metal, but such is the fact.

"The process of robbing the earth of its gold has now been reduced to such a fine point," said Professor Price, "that the gentle flowing of water over the ore gleans it of its golden treasures, and this works well in cases where the old chloride and other methods are not so useful."

But the water of which Professor Price spoke is not so pure as it looks, though the eye could never distinguish it from that which is dipped by the old oaken bucket from a well in the deep tangled wildwood. The water used by miners in bringing gold from piles of mineral bearing quartz is charged with a simple chemical which has the potency to dissolve gold and hold it in solution. In truth, the sparkling liquid which flows over hundreds of tons of quartz, trickles through the mines and seeks its level, laden with gold, is charged with a deadly poison, cyanide of potassium, a drug which ferrets out the minutest particles of the yellow metal, dissolves them and brings the precious burden to the vats for conversion into refined gold again.

The cyanide process is as noiseless and unerring as the laws of gravitation, doing its work as quietly as "the majestic dance of the hours," unhindered by darkness or weather, by disasters of field or flood.

The state mining bureau of California was one of the first in the United States to investigate the merits of the cyanide process, and since the earliest investigations the method has found extensive application. It is so interesting that its results are nothing less than marvelous. This method of extracting both gold and silver from ores is based on the fact that even a very weak solution of cyanide of potassium dissolves gold and silver, forming respectively "auro-potassic cyanide" and "argento-potassic cyanide," in the language of the chemists.

This interesting process consists of treating the ores with a weak solution of potassium cyanide, usually by allowing the solution to percolate through the ore, or by agitating a mixture of the ore and solution. When this part of the operation is completed, the solution is separated from the solid material, and the gold and silver are precipitated in a metallic form. The process is modern in its application, though it has long been known that cyanide of potassium would "eat gold." During the last five years, however, the process has been introduced into almost every goldfield in California and elsewhere, and more than $20,000,000 have been recovered by the gentle flowing of waters charged with the magical chemical over heaps of ore. Aside from the thoroughness of the permeating water method, its economy is a marked feature in mining. It is in great favor with the gold mining companies of New Zealand and at Johannesburg, Africa, as well as in California.

One of the most advantageous features of the cyanide method is that it can be applied to many gold and silver ores generally called "rebellious" or "refractory." The rebellious ore is placed in a vat for percolation, and the solution is run preferably from the bottom by a pipe, rising slowly through the ore. The solution containing gold is carried through precipitating appliances into the final reservoir, where, robbed of its wealth of metal, it may be repumped into ore vats and again used for searching out the coveted metal.

One of the curious things about the solution is that a total percentage not stronger than an eighth of 1 per cent will carry away the gold almost as well as fluid of greater strength.

Precipitation is effected by the use of fine pieces of zinc, so arranged that when the rich waters flow over them the fine gold clusters in rich deposits over the zinc, for which it has an affinity. The gold which thus deserts the waters of cyanide deposits itself in the form of fine dust on the plates of zinc. The percentage of gold extracted by this process is very large. A large parcel of fine sulphurets from the Utica mines yielded an average of 93.18 per cent of the gold value under the cyanide treatment, and similar results have been experienced elsewhere in the state. The cyanide plants are being extended, and the noiseless process is everywhere becoming popular.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Nut Diet.

It is evident by many straws noticed in a general reading of periodical and newspaper literature that the next fad of the dietists is to be nuts. All the scientific cooking and health food authorities are urging with increasing persistence the value of this natural food and giving receipts for various nut flours, from which different varieties of bread cake may be made that are nutritious and of medicinal value in certain ailments. And now we learn that "Miss Ellen S. Atkins, a talented London woman who lost a spendid contralto voice four years ago from an attack of grip, has completely recovered her vocal powers through persisting in a fruit and nut diet for a year and a half."—New York Times.

Dry.

In a volume of sermons by a well known but turgid preacher the following lines were found written upon the flyleaf:

If there should be another flood,
For refuge hither fly.
Though all the world should be submerged,
This book would still be dry.

FAMOUS POLITICAL PHRASE.

Used In Different Forms by Lincoln, Theodore Parker and Webster.

In a letter headed "Not Lincoln's Own Words," a correspondent points out that the words "government of the people, by the people, for the people," in the famous Gettysburg address were not original with Lincoln. He attempts to further show that they were original with Henry Wilson, and were quoted by Lincoln from a letter written in 1860 by Wilson to certain persons in Boston.

In a speech delivered at the New England antislavery convention, Boston, May 29, 1850, by Theodore Parker, may be found the expression "a government of all the people, by all the people, for all the people," the exact language, with the exception of one word, of that ascribed to Wilson and employed by Lincoln. But still further back had the same idea been expressed in substantially the same way by Daniel Webster in one of his most splendid oratorical efforts, whose every phrase was familiar to all patriotic Americans long before Parker uttered his speech or Wilson wrote his letter. In his second speech on Foot's resolution, Jan. 26, 1830, Webster used these words, "The people's government, made for the people, made by the people and answerable to the people."

The phrase discussed belongs no more to Wilson than to Lincoln. The words can no more be said to have been "quoted" by Lincoln from Wilson than from Parker or Webster. Lincoln was familiar with the writings and speeches of Parker. He had probably never seen this particular letter of Wilson's. That his language should be exactly the same as that of the latter was a coincidence, but probably nothing more. The phrase was merely the expression, in the simplest, most direct language, of the glorious yet popular and familiar idea of the constitution and object of our form of government. The expression cannot be ascribed to any one man. Lincoln does not give the statement as a positive declaration—as a new coined phrase intended to add to his laurels as a public speaker, but uses the words as descriptive of our government in uttering the resolve that it "shall not perish from the earth."

That some words of the speech had been said before does not detract from the beauty or grandeur of Lincoln's address as a whole. His speech, which has been declared to be the greatest in the records of oratory of our own or any other country, was so not because it was the labored and polished effort of a practiced orator, but because of the greatness of the man, as a man, who uttered it.—Washington Star.

SELLING A MINE.

A Western Man's Great Luck In Disposing of His Property.

"It is the easiest thing on earth to sell a mine in London for almost any price, provided you have anything to show an expert," said Major Frank McLaughlin. "There is also a right way and a wrong way to go about it. Some time ago I went to London to negotiate the sale of some mining property. Of course, the first thing I had to do was to let capital know what I was there for. Then, when inquiries commenced, I simply said: 'Gentlemen, I have mining property to sell. If you mean business and want to buy, send your expert out to examine the property and make a report on it. You will know then what you are buying.'

"A company was organized. The expert examined the property and reported favorably, and a meeting was held to discuss terms.

"'Now, major,' said the spokesman, 'we have found that the property may be worth something. What is your price?'

"'Two hundred and fifty thousand,' said I.

"'That is more than we expected to pay. We expected to pay about 200,000. There is not much difference between 200,000 and 250,000. If you will drop the 50,000 we will take it.'

"I expected to get about $100,000 for the property, so with a show of reluctancy I agreed to accept their offer. When the papers were made out, I was surprised to learn that they had been talking about pounds and I about dollars, but I was very careful not to let my surprise leak, and that is the way I got $1,000,000 for the mine. Great people to do business with."—San Francisco Post.

Loss of the Musical Faculty.

"Amusia," or loss of the musical faculty, has been reviewed by Professor Edgren of Stockholm. The disease proves to be strictly analogous to aphasia, the loss of speech, which may or may not accompany it. Two general forms are recognized—the sensory form, where tones cannot be appreciated by the ear or notes read by the eye, and the motor form, in which the patient cannot sing, play or write notes. Ballet places the expression of music between the emotional and the artificial or verbal language. Music is less complicated and earlier appreciated than speech. Many children sing before they speak, and Reyer has told of a child of 9 months who could repeat the notes exactly as played on the piano, while Dvorak, the musical composer, is said to have had a son who sang the "Fatinitza" march with his nurse at the age of 1 year.—London Public Opinion.

Her Two Chances.

The Soubrette—How do you like your part in the new play?

The Leading Woman—Oh, it's just lovely! I go through a dying scene in the second act, but I come to life again in the third and die all over again to slow music at the end of the play. It's sure to be a go!—New York Herald.

A Drawback.

Mrs. Newly—There's one thing about bloomers I don't like.

Mrs. Lately—What's that?

Mrs. Newly—The pockets are so easy to find. My husband empties them every night, and I never have a bit of change in the morning.

THE NEW WOMAN.

Of the new fashioned woman there's much been said—
Of her wanting to vote and a' that
And of her desire to wear men's attire,
His coat and his vest and a' that,
And a' that, and a' that.
She may wear trousers and a' that,
She may even ride a horse as men ride,
But a woman's a woman for a' that.
See yonder damsel passing by,
She's up to date and a' that,
She wears a man's hat, likewise his cravat,
His shirt and collar and a' that,
And a' that, and a' that,
His suspenders and cuffs and a' that,
But do what she can to imitate man
A woman's a woman for a' that.
The modern maid, her form arrayed
In sweater and bloomers and a' that,
Rides a "bike" exactly like
Her brother does and a' that.
She may wear bloomers for skirts and a' that,
Wear men's collars and shirts and a' that,
May wear vests if she will, but the fact remains still—
A woman's a woman for a' that.

HOTEL READING ROOMS.

Their Principal Patrons In New York People Not Guests at the Hotel.

In one respect at least New York differs from all other American cities, and that is in regard to the importance of the reading rooms of its hotels. There are in New York 229 hotels, exclusive of apartment houses with restaurant attachments. Every hotel in New York or elsewhere—every genuine hotel, that is—has a reading room, and in it are to be seen gathered the most important accessories of a hotel—the newsstand, the telegraph office, the telephone office and the railroad and steamboat ticket office. In a country hotel the reading room is the seat of great activity, and it seems to be the bounden duty of the transient male patrons of the hotel, as well as the regular male boarders, to be in the reading room as long a time as possible between meals, and usually a late comer is obliged to wait his turn for a seat at one of the writing desks or tables or for a chance to read one of the newspapers which are kept on file.

According to the observations of all hotel men throughout the country, the smaller the town the more important the hotel reading room; the larger the town the less important the hotel reading room. It is apparently in corroboration of this rule that the reading rooms of most New York hotels, though furnished in attractive style and well calculated to serve the convenience of guests, are usually deserted, or if not deserted are patronized chiefly by persons not guests of the hotel. In other words, men not stopping at the hotel, but meeting friends in its main corridor, utilize the conveniences of the reading room. Added to these are a few of the transient guests, who for the most part come to New York on business or pleasure from great distances, and especially from interior towns. Boston men, Philadelphia men, Baltimore men and Buffalo men are not great patrons of the reading rooms of New York hotels, but transient guests from the small towns of the country are, and some of them sit for hours at a time conning the back numbers of newspapers or writing mechanically and then nervously destroying letters to friends and relations.

The paradoxical thing about hotel reading rooms in New York is that though ostensibly maintained for the use and convenience of the hotel guests they are at the service in nearly every case of persons who are not only not guests of the hotel, but who, furthermore, are resident New Yorkers. Nearly every hotel in the city has a large number of patrons who are known as "regulars," who stay for several months at a time, and who are seen very little in the hotel corridors or in the reading room. Occasionally a patron of a New York hotel, perhaps one of its oldest guests, will find it necessary to write a letter or to consult a newspaper file, and when he does he is usually compelled to wait until an outside person not a guest is ready to take his departure.—New York Sun.

Saved by an Elk.

A curious story of adventure comes from Montana. While a freight train was lying over at a small mountain station the engineer borrowed a shotgun and started out for a hunt. He was about returning to his train when a cow made her appearance. Before he realized that there was any danger the animal made a rush at him, and he ran with all his speed. But the cow was a better racer, and in a few minutes caught him by his clothing, splitting his coat from waist to collar and tossing him into the air. Getting to his feet as quickly as possible, he dodged behind a tree, and then to his dismay found that the gun barrel was bent so as to be useless.

The next ten minutes were very lively ones. The cow chased the engineer round and round the tree, and when he got a chance to hit her with the gun barrel it only seemed to enrage her the more. It was only a question of time when he would succumb to fatigue, but a diversion occurred that saved his life. An angry snort was heard, and a big elk appeared upon the scene, head down and prepared for a fight. The cow was so mad by this time that she was ready for anything, and in another moment the two animals dashed at each other. The engineer watched the combat for a few minutes until prudence suggested that he should make a retreat while he could. He regained the train in safety and never knew the outcome of the battle, but the presumption is that the elk was the victor.—Exchange.

Remains to Be Seen.

The women students in the university at Ann Arbor, Mich., are getting themselves into hot water by wearing their bicycle bloomers in the house. Of course the issue was to be expected. Everybody knew it must come, for girls who once enjoy the freedom of this debatable costume are bound to try it under other conditions than skimming over the ground on a bike. It remains to be seen if Ann Arbor is equal to this strain upon its ethical taste, or whether the professors' wives, who champion the innovators, are to come out second best in this merry fight, which may extend eastward.—Boston Herald.

AY, JANUARY 3..... 1896

The window smashing method of btaining food and shelter has made its appearance in Chicago. It is becoming quite frequent in the large eastern cities, and not many months ago there were a few instances of it in San Francisco and some other Pacific coast plac e. A poor wretch out of work, out of money, unable to obtain by honest methods even the bare necessities of existence, becomes desperate and resolves that rather than freeze or starve to death in the streets he try one more way of prolonging his miserable life. So he proceeds to break a window in some business house, is arrested, pleads guilty and is sent to jail, where for a few days or weeks he is sheltered and fed at public expense. It cannot be denied that there are men loafing about in cities and in rural districts who are loafers by nature; who would not honestey earn a living for themselves if opportunity were offered them. Such persons, if physically able to work, deserve neither charity nor sympathy. But, on the other hand, there are several millions of persons in this land of plenty and boasted progress who constantly strive to find honest employment; but can get little or none, and are, therefore, in no condition to enjoy life or be of use to the world. In the light of such facts, it is plain that there must be something radically wrong with our social system, and the wrong should be righted. In a country with practically unlimited natural resources, and which is comparatively but sparsely settled, there is no natural cause for involuntary poverty and its resultant evils. If men were allowed freer access to natural opportunities there would be less poverty, less desperation and less window smashing.

Not since war times has any presidential act so challenged the spirit of our people as has Mr. Cleveland's reaffirmation of the Monroe Doctrine in connection with the Venezuelan boundary question. Within twenty-four hours after the reading of the message in the House that body, on motion of a Republican and by unanimous vote, passed a bill embodying the President's suggestions; and on the day following the same measure passed the Senate, also by unanimous vote. The popular response was not less prompt and decisive. The public men and the journals of the country, without distinction of party, gave immediate and enthusiastic assent to a principle which appears to be unanimously esteemed as a renewal of the character of American independence. The chances of war in support of the President's declaration—which is that England must either submit to arbitration or accept the findings of an American commission as to divisional line between her territories and those of Venezuela—have been freely discussed and there is manifest no disposition to shrink from it. The doctrine of America for the Americans is clearly one for which our people stand ready to devote their fortunes and their blood; and if war should come, it will be waged by a united and earnest people. The general feeling, however, is that there will be no war; that England will not push her claims to the point of fighting for them; and the hope is universal that a peaceful way out of the difficulty will be found.

The gentlemen drawn for the Grand Jury should not seek to be excused from the public duty, but should enter upon it with civic patriotism and be proud of the chance to render a service to the community.

How strong the English influence is in Chile may be gathered from the fact that Chile is the only nation that disapproves of the Monroe doctrine.

Philadelphia should have taken to the bicycle at the time of the street car strike and waited until employer and employees settled the difference.

The San Francisco dailies got out monster Christmas uumbers. The Call, and Examiner doing exceptionally well.

CIGARETTES AND THE TEETH.

A Dentist Says the Nerves In Them Are Killed by Nicotine Poisoning.

"There is one bad result of constant cigarette smoking that very few people know anything about," said a Brooklyn dentist. "The result itself has been apparent to me and to all dentists for a long time, but the cause has been a mystery until very recently. For years the nerves of teeth in every other way perfect have been found dead. A careful examination of a dead nerve found in an unexposed tooth recently revealed the fact that it had been poisoned by nicotine, and thereby the mystery referred to was solved. Nicotine poisoning from cigarette smoking is killing the nerves in the teeth of smokers. It is a most serious state of affairs, although most people will not understand. They think a dead tooth is as good as a live one. They will find their mistake some day.

"A young woman whom I have known for some time came here the other day and wanted a tooth attended to. I worked on the tooth some time, and some of the instruments I used should have made her scream a little bit. But she never made a sound, and I naturally concluded that the nerve of the tooth was dead. It surprised me because the tooth was a good one and the nerve unexposed. Well, I extracted the nerve, and the minute I saw it I knew what was the trouble.

"'Do you want a live nerve left in your head?' I asked.

"'Why, of course,' she replied.

"'Then stop smoking cigarettes,' I said.

"'Why, doctor, what do you mean?' she began. Then she put on a great show of indignation.

"'My dear young lady,' I said, 'what's the use of talking so? I'm a dental surgeon and know a thing when I see it. You have been smoking cigarettes for a long time, and my advice was given in a perfectly friendly spirit.' Well, she collapsed then, acknowledged the truth of what I had said, and that ended it. I don't think that cigarette smokers figure this result of nicotine poisoning in with the many other injurious effects of the weed, but to my mind it is the most dangerous of all."

THE MONEY ISN'T THERE.

A Pickpocket Who Was Foolish Enough to Steal a Lady's Pocketbook.

"I just swiped a leather, Jim," said a pickpocket to another of his profession as he came across him sitting on a bench in Union square.

"Wus it one o' them purty ones what the women carries round de street in der hands?"

"Yes, I swiped it up on Fift' avener when she wus lookin inter er windy."

"If yer'd been in de bizniz as long as I hev, yer wouldn't er took it."

"Why?"

"'Tain't wuth it."

"A feller might strike er big haul, though, that way some time."

"Not on yer life he wouldn't. I've swiped a load on 'em, an I never got one yit that I could git a beer out on. Dey don't carry money in dem leathers. Dey's only er bluff. Try dat one yer've got and see if it's enny good."

Glancing about him warily to make sure that no one was watching him, the pickpocket opened the purse. He found three samples of silkoline, a patent glove buttoner, a card advertising a lotion for removing blackheads from the face, a sheet of flesh colored court plaster, some samples of scrim and Madras, a list of prices of carpets, a circular showing an illustration of a patent hose supporter, a card of small safety pins, two slabs of chewing gum warranted to cure dyspepsia and a card bearing her address and instructions to take her there if she met with an accident.

"That's all dere is in it," said the man who had "swiped" the pocketbook as he turned it upside down and shook it, with a look of disgust on his face.

"Didn't I tell yer," remarked the other. "I've 'swiped' dem t'ings till I'm tired. Dey're all de same. De women don't carry nothin but trash in 'em. De money ain't dere, never!"—New York Herad.

Miami is a corruption of Miahmezah, meaning "stony river."

Clippings From Black Rock.

The trustees of the Taboose District very wisely invested in school supplies for the benefit of the pupils one day last week. W. A. Steward, a traveling agent hearing that a new school house was being erected correctly surmised that he could turn an honest penny and benefit mankind by exhibiting his samples. To see was to purchase, and our new school house is to be supplied with new window shades, a Webster's unabridged dictionary and chart that enables pupils to understand all the rudiment of learning from reading to physiology.

Mr. John Martinto met with an accident, which might have been more serious, on Thursday of last week. Having unhitched his team from the wagon, was in the act of leading them away, when one of them jumped onto him, striking him with his forefeet, throwing throwing him to the ground. One arm was broken and the other badly injured, and but for the prompt action of Mr. Conklin, in whose yard it occurred, the animal would have soon killed his victim. Medical aid was at once summoned, and now John is able to be out, but carries his left arm in a sling.

The people of this vicinity do nothing by halves, and when the ladies announced that they would give a party on New Year's Eve, at the new store, to which every one was invited, all made preparations to attend for all knew that it was worth their while to do so. The crowd began to gather at an early hour. Games were at first engaged in, and then Mr. Neil made the proposition that the company proceed to vote on a name for the new town, which has sprung up, and which until now has been nameless. Ballots were distributed and each wrote his choice of names. Many were suggested, but the ones that met with favor were Alva and Modena. After an amusing and interesting contest, Modena received the most votes, which was made the unanimous choice and all followed Mr. Conklin in hurraning for the new town of Modena.

Then the ladies quietly withdrew into an adjoining room, and many were the whispering and surmisings among the male members. But their curiosity was soon dispelled, for the ladies returned laden with that which goes to make life worth living. Sandwiches, pies, cakes, salads and coffee disappeared in a marvelous manner. Truly the way to a man's heart is through his stomach.

Dancing was now in order and hearts grew light, as the feet kept time to the strains of the violin. How the grandfathers and grandmothers did dance, and how the kids did try to imitate them Music was furnished by Mr. Frank Levet, who handles the bow in a masterly manner. It was a late hour when the company withdrew, and before leaving coffee and cake were again partaken of. And so the first social function in the new and thriving town of Modena was a grand success.

At the party on New Year's Eve a petition to remove the post office of Tibbets from Mr. L. E. Smith's residence to Modena, and Mr. A. A. Neil appointed post master, was circulated. This is the universal wish, and shows the enterprise and push of Modena's citizens.

Mr. J. W. Callaway has been making extensive improvements in his dwelling during the past month. NONPARIEL.

Another Fire

The dwelling house on the Lacey place was burned last Tuesday night about ten o'clock. The fire when first seen from town looked as though it might be a hay stack on fire out at Blackrock, in fact nearly everybody took it to be such and were surprised to learn that it had been so close. Others thinking it might be at the Fort started immediately after seeing the fire and upon arriving found the house about burned. It seems there had been nobody living in the house for a few days past and at the time of the fire there was nobody in the close vicinity. The first persons to arrive on the scene being F. Moore and Carl Walter, the latter driving out from town, when they arrived the roof had fallen in. The loss of house-hold furniture and the like is not very great there being, however a number of useful articles and quite a lot of provisions stored in the cellar, a few yards in the rear of the house, which was burned. The night was so still that nothing burned except the house and cellar, the fence only a few few away was left standing. Arthur Bell and family had moved out of the house only a few days before and had removed their last lot of house-hold effects that afternoon. J. W. Lacey was at the house all the forenoon until two o'clock, when he and W. M. Boyd came to town, leaving the house alone. From town Mr. Lacey returned to his home at Georges Creek and when Mr. Boyd returned to the house that evening he found it pretty well gone. It is understood there had been no fire in the building for several days. Mr. M. Muldoon of Blackrock was to have moved into the house on the following day. The house was built in the early days of the County and was in good order. It was insured by the London Liverpool & Globe Co. for $750.

The Dance

At the pavillion last Tuesday evening was only fairly attended, about sixteen couples being present. The evening being quite cold was probably cause of a number not attending. All who came enjoyed themselves immensely, as would be judged from the fact that they danced until four o'clock Wednesday morning. An excellent supper was served at the Norman House at midnight.

The following named Big Piners visited Independence this week on business in the Land Office and otherwise: Fred Crocker, Vincent Borel, W. P. McMurry, George Hall, Edwin M. Glass, Joseph M. Zorn, Charles M. Pilgrim, Wallace Pilgrim, Willie F. Baker, John Kinney, John D. Shaw, E. Murphy, Samuel Meredith.

Bee Keepers Convention.

The annual meeting of the Inyo County Bee-Keepers' Association was held at Bishop on Dec. 28th. The initiation fee was abolished, so that hereafter members, whether new or old, will only have to pay 50 cents per year.

After the preliminary business had been disposed of, Mr. N. J. Cooley gave an address full of interesting and instructive information in regard to Eastern honey markets, their demands and prices. He emphasized the importance of having the sections well filled, and of using only new, clean packing paper in the shipping-cases; also of avoiding as much as possible the shipping of any dark colored honey, which can be disposed of at a better price in the home market. The forty-eight pound case used for the California market, is altogether unsuitable for the Eastern market, where nothing larger than a twenty-four pound case is wanted, and glass is demanded in one side of the case. Neither sections nor cases should be stamped or stenciled for the Eastern market, except with the producers name, and in no case should the word "California" be put on anything, as there is at present a strong prejudice against California honey. The different classes of honey should not be marked as first and second grade, but as "Extra White," "White," "Extra C" and "C." During the coming honey season Mr. Cooley will write out a set of instructions for grading and packing, which will be printed by the Secretary and issued to honey producers of this County. A committee was appointed to confer with Messrs Forbes & Tobey in regard to prices for shipping cases for next season. The association resolved to adopt a uniform size of case, so that it can be manufactured and kept in stock at the lowest possible price. F. K. Andrews, O. Allerton and Wm. Muth-Rasmussen were appointed to investigate and ascertain the amount of supplies for next season, needed in their respective localities. The Secretary urged the importance of securing supplies at an early date, and was instructed to correspond with parties at Reno about ordering a car load of supplies from the A. I. Root Company, and to communicate the result of his correspondence to the association. Quite a number of new names were added to the membership list, which more than doubled during the session.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year; President, F. K. Andrews; Vice President, W. R. Tibbets; Secretory and Treasurer, Wm. Muth-Rasmussen. Big Pine was selected as the place for the next annual meeting.

All who are in need of supplies, are requested to communicate as soon as possible with the nearest member of above named committee, in order to secure car load rate and save freight expenses.

WM. MUTH-RASSMUSSEN, Sec'y.

J. J. Smith of the Inyo Broom Factory at Bishop favored this office with a couple of excellent samples of his own manufacture. Mr. Smith will be down this way with a load of brooms by the middle or last of this month, anybody can then test the quality of them to their own satisfaction.

Look out for mutilated coins when receiving money; there are a number in circulation in which a small hole has been drilled, apparently for use as a charm of some kind. They will not be received at any government office.

A very pleasant new years dance was reported at Big Pine Tue[illegible] night music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Hampton and an excellent supper was served at the Big Pine hotel.

The annual Indian fandango opened at Georges Ceek last Sunday with the proper ceremonies, continueing open throughout the week and will probably end with a big poker game next Sunday.

The horse race at Big Pine last Wednesday was between the McCarrol and Crocker horses. The distance was a quarter of a mile for a purse of $25. The race was won by the McCarroll horse, time 26¼.

Wm. Muth-Rassmussen of Camp Independence visited Bishop the first of the week to attend a meeting of the Beekeepers Association held at that place.

G. T. Rives, Superintendent of the Reward Mining Co's plant over at the Hirsh mine, left for the city last Saturday for a short business visit.

Hoods sarsaparilla calander is out and may be obtained at any drug store or by sending six cents to the firm at Lowell, Mass. It makes a very useful ornament for the home.

Thos. Boland, J. A. McKenzie and W. M. Richards came up from Keeler last Saturday to attend the regular meeting of the Masonic lodge. They returned Sunday.

Rev. J. W. Morris, principal of the Inyo Acadamy, delivered an interesting address to a fair sized audience at the Church last Sunday evening.

Mrs. W. M. Richards came up from Keeler last Tuesday morning and is visiting with Miss Lena Thompson at Camp Independence.

A new years entertainment was held out at Liberty district last Tuesday evening, consisting of a literary program, refreshments etc.

A Commetti of Fish Springs is in San Francisco at present and it is said that he will visit the old country before returning.

E. A. Reddy took in the new years exercises at Big Pine, returning here yesterday, and left for Darwin to-day.

J. E. Jones Jr. and family of Round Valley are visiting Mr. C. A. Walter and family of Camp Independence.

A New Years suprise party was held out at Black-rock last Tuesday evening, at the store of A. A. Neil.

Aaron Reynolds and family came up from Keeler last Tuesday morning and visited here for a few days.

County Clerk Hession and family returned from Big Pine last Monday, having spent Christmas there.

New Years Party.

A very enjoyable party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Partridge at their residence, on New Years Eve. About thirty guests were present, representing Milton, Independence, Oak Creek and Liberty. Songs were sung and games played until nearly twelve, when every one became quiet. Timepieces were anxiously watched until the New Year was ushered in amid kindly greetings; after which a dainty feast was spread, followed by more songs and games. The party broke up in the 'wee sma" hours singing "God be With You till We Meet Again." UNOME.

The Heney Case.

The jury in the Heney case, charged with stealing $23,000 from the Mint, returned a verdict of guilty. Six ballots being taken, five being 11 to 1 for conviction. Heney was sentenced to eight years at hard labor and to pay a fine of $5,000. It is understood that the government officers intend to begin proceedings against all persons who were mentioned in the Heney trial as endavoring to prevent certain witnesses from testifying against Heney.

Coolgardie.

Rich new finds are being constantly reported from Coolgardie gold fields. Coolgardie, Australia, is an accessible point, reached by steamer to Fremantle, thence by rail to Southern Cross and team to destination. The trip to Australia on the fine steamers of the Oceanic Steamship Company via Honolulu, Samoa, and New Zealand is pleasure sailing the day long. This line tickets passengers to Cape Town, South Africa. Map of Coolgardie district and Pacific ports reached by the Oceanic Steamship Company is mailed free to any address by the O. S. S. ### Salmon In Alaska.

It may be matter of astonishment to many people to know that more than one-half the salmon pack of the United States and nearly half the world's supply of canned salmon now comes from Alaska. The capital invested in the Alaska salmon fisheries is said to be more than $3,000,000, and the value of a season's catch, not including the manufactured products therefrom, comes to about $2,000,000. Last year there were 22 canneries in operation, which packed 646,000 cases, and 24 salting establishments put on the markets 21,000 barrels of salted salmon.

This is obviously killing the goose that lays the golden egg. No reproduction of the salmon, marvelous though it may seem, could stand such a drain, especially when, as it appears from the researches and examinations of the experts of the national fish commission, most of the salmon are seined at the mouths of the rivers, thereby preventing their run up stream to the spawning grounds and effectually preventing their reproduction.

Alaska is so completely within the control of the government that all this can be stopped without the least difficulty, and an end should be put at once to the slaughter of salmon in this reckless and wasteful way. The Columbia and other rivers of the Pacific had been almost stripped of salmon before the development of the Alaskan salmon fishing, and now it seems likely that the same thing will happen in Alaska unless some check be placed on the salmon catchers and canners. Of course they will go on as long as they are permitted, for the business is a lucrative one in ordinary years and has already made a great deal of money for those engaged in it, but all the same it must be regulated and checked, or before long the Alaska salmon will have gone the way of the bison and the fur seal, and nature will not forgive such an infringement upon her rights and privileges.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A FAMOUS MAN'S MOTHER.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson's Beautiful Tribute to His Mother.

I trace to my mother's direct influence three leading motives of her youngest son's life—the love of personal liberty, of religious freedom and of the equality of the sexes—writes Thomas Wentworth Higginson in The Ladies' Home Journal. As to the more subtle and intimate influences, they ordinarily came by contact, not by preaching. She always maintained that the younger children of a large family had a much better chance for development than the elder because they had more freedom to develop themselves. With her elder children, she always said, overconscientiousness almost bore her to the earth. She felt personally responsible for every childish fault.

She had been reared in the school of Locke, which regarded the human soul as blank paper, on which parents and teachers did all the writing. But her children were of strong and varied individuality, and she learned in time to study the temperament of each and be patient with its unfolding. Her whole formula of training consisted in these three things: To retain the entire confidence of the child, to do whatever seemed wisest and to be patient. Her trust in Providence was absolute and controlling, as was her sense of the personality of the Deity.

Most valuable of all her traits to her children next to her quality of sunshine was probably her absolute rectitude, the elevation of her whole tone, the complete unworldliness, so that no child of hers ever heard her refer to any standard but the highest. With all this was combined the conscientious accuracy in affairs, the exquisite nicety in all household details, which belong to the best of the traditions of New England.

The Contagion of Ideas.

Affirmation, pure and simple, without reasoning and without proof, is one of the surest means of planting an idea in the popular mind. The more concise it is, the more free from every appearance of proofs and demonstration, the more authority it has. The religious books and the codes of all ages have always proceeded by simple affirmation. Statesmen called upon to defend any political cause and manufacturers advertising their goods know what it is worth. Yet it has no real influence, except it is constantly repeated and so far as possible in the same terms. Napoleon said that repetition was the only serious figure in rhetoric. By repetition an affirmation is incrusted in the minds of hearers till they at last accept it as a demonstrated truth. What is called the current of opinion is formed, and then the potent mechanism of contagion comes in. Ideas that have reached a certain stage, in fact, possess a contagious power as intense as that of microbes. Not fear and courage only are contagious. Ideas are, too, on condition that they are repeated often enough.

When the mechanism of contagion has begun to work, the idea enters upon the phase that leads to success. Opinion, which repelled it at first, ends by tolerating and then accepting it. The idea henceforward gains a penetrating and subtle force which sends it onward, while at the same time creating a sort of special atmosphere, a general way of thinking.—Popular Science Monthly.

His Occupation.

The street car was crowded, and as it turned a corner sharply a man who was standing in the aisle made a grab at a strap, but missed it and involuntarily embraced a sharp faced young woman standing near him.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," he said.

"Sir," she exclaimed, "you are a boor."

"No, madam," rejoined the penitent offender, "I am not. I am a newspaper man."

"You are, hey?" was the contemptuous rejoinder. "What do you do about a newspaper office, I'd like to know?"

"I am the pressman."

The sharp faced young woman turned a little redder, but she didn't say anything more.—Chicago Tribune.

O CAPTAIN, MY CAPTAIN!

O captain, my captain, our fearful trip is done;
The ship has weathered every rack; the prize
we sought is won;
The port is near, the bells I hear, the people
all exulting,
While follow eyes the steady keel, the vessel
grim and daring.
But, O heart, heart, heart!
Oh, the bleeding drops of red
Where on the deck my captain lies,
Fallen cold and dead.

O captain, my captain, rise up and hear the bells;
Rise up, for you the flag is flung, for you the bugle trills,
For you bouquets and ribboned wreaths, for you the shores a-crowding,
For you they call, the swaying mass, the eager faces turning.
Here, captain, dear father,
This arm beneath your head!
It is some dream that on the deck
You've fallen cold and dead.

My captain does not answer. His lips are pale and still.
My father does not feel my arm. He has no pulse nor will.
The ship is anchored safe and sound, its voyage closed and done.
From a fearful trip the victor ship comes in,
its object won.
Exult, O shores, and ring, O bells,
But I with mournful tread
Walk the deck my captain lies,
Fallen cold and dead.

—Walt Whitman.

PARALYZED.

My emotions—meaning by that those feelings of the heart which tend to make a man see all women as the only perfection of creation, and some one woman as the aggregated perfection of all women—my emotions, as I was about to say when I interrupted myself, are utterly paralyzed and have been since the 14th day of last September at 15 minutes after 11 o'clock a. m., eastern time.

At that hour and for several hours previously I was in the act of spending my summer vacation at a delightfully quiet and retired resort on the Atlantic coast, where also, among a number of other fortunates, were Miss Ruth Allen, Miss Myrtle Morton—such a sweet name that, I used to think!—and Jack Foster, the bane of my existence and the paralyzer of my emotions.

Foster was a dashing fellow, while I was merely a dashed fellow, and because of that possibly I was less fortunate in my heart affairs than he was. In any event, I never loved a dear gazelle, as the poet has it, I believe, but some day, sooner or later, the nervy Foster came that way and chose her for his mate, the result of which invariably was that I lost her.

Several times during the summer I had, for these depredations of his, been tempted to drown him, for I was a fine sailor and he wasn't, though he often went out with me, because, as he said, he felt safe in my hands, and he had a large life insurance policy in addition. Then he would laugh at his time tried and fire tested insurance joke, and all the girls would laugh also.

Bah! The idiots, to laugh at an old chestnut like that! A cocoanut was equally as funny and much larger.

However, as time moved on Jack gave me a chance, and, left to my own devices, it was not a great while before I was paying undivided attention to Miss Allen and Miss Morton. These two were my choice, and one, I felt sure, would be chosen, but as yet I had not determined which one.

The time for decision came at last, though, for my month was nearly up, and on that sweet September morn I had an engagement to go walking with Miss Allen. I felt that morning that she was the one woman of all women for me, and I asked her to go with me, so that I might have an opportunity to ask her a far more important question. I am sure that she knew my purpose, for I had more than once almost told her what was in my heart.

"Miss Ruth," I said as we strolled along the shore returning to the hotel, "may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, Mr. Bryting," she replied as sweetly as a girl could reply or a bird could sing.

"It is not an every day question," I said as a slight preparation to her, "but one of great importance to me."

"It isn't a conundrum, is it?" she asked nervously. "For I hate conundrums."

"Yes, it is," I answered. "At least it is about something I don't want to give up."

There wasn't anything funny in that, but I laughed at it and she joined in it, giving me to that extent an addition to my courage.

"Well, you don't have to give it up," she said. "You surely can answer your own conundrum."

"Not this one, I fear."

"Goodness; it must be a hard one. Don't ask me. I'm sure I can't answer it."

"Yes, you can," I insisted. "You know," and I became serious, "you know, Miss Ruth, that for some time past I have been thinking of you a great deal, more indeed than I should have done, for there was so much uncertainty in it all. I have been thinking of this very moment, and of you, and of what I should say to you and how I should say it, to win the answer I desired above all things earthly."

"Well, but what is your conundrum?" Miss Allen asked.

"Simply this, Will you be my wife?" I said, dropping on one knee in the sand.

"Goodness! I can answer that easily enough. No. I cannot marry you."

The unhesitating way in which she spoke made me almost hopeless, yet I persisted.

"But you could learn," I pleaded there in the sand—fool that I was to think that a woman could learn to marry a man! Whoever heard of such a thing?

"No," she said, "I could not learn for—for—for"—

"Don't finish the sentence," I said bitterly as I rose from my devotional attitude. "Don't finish it, pray. I know you will say that you love another, and that utterly precludes your taking lessons under my instructions. Of course," I went on, brutally enough, I'm sure, "it would have been utterly impossible for you to have prevented me from making the fool of myself I have, and I absolve you from any connivance in the matter. May I ask as an epilogue to this comedy that you will tell me who the happy man is that I may congratulate him?"

Her eyes blazed, and her cheeks reddened, and how pretty she was as she looked at me as an angry queen might look upon an offending subject!

"Mr. Bryting," she said scornfully, "I had hoped to spare you pain and had thought to say goodby to you after this pleasant holiday by the sea as friends say goodby, with sorrow in every note, but now I shall say goodby with unfeigned pleasure, and in parting will feel a peculiar delight in telling you that the happy man is your friend Mr. Foster, and that he asked me only yesterday to be his wife, and I took this walk with you to tell you so and did not do so because, as you are well aware, you took up all the time at my disposal with the absurdly important question you had to ask me."

What further remarks she might have made I have no means of knowing, but they would no doubt have gone much further, for in an angry woman's game with language she plays without limit, but fortunately for my self esteem we were startled at that moment by the shouts of a party coming over a sand hill to our left, and by the time we had made a rapid change in our outward show of temper the crowd was upon us. They had come out in search of us to join a party for a sail, and among the searchers were Mr. Foster and Miss Morton. Under the circumstances it was not a difficult matter for Miss Allen and myself to effect an interchange of escorts, and I accompanied Miss Morton back to the hotel, leaving Miss Allen to the tender mercies of her fiance.

As Miss Morton and I followed in the wake of the returning procession I made myself particularly gay, and she seemed to appreciate me more than she had ever done.

"What a color you have today, Mr. Bryting!" she exclaimed as she looked at me with admiring eyes.

"I wasn't aware of it, really," I replied, with culpable lack of truth in my words, for I knew I must be flushed after what I had just gone through, notwithstanding the fact that I could feel my face burning as if I had been standing in the hot sun bareheaded.

"Well, you have," she continued, "and it makes you handsomer than I ever saw you before."

"Possibly," I said, speaking slowly and with evident feeling, "it is because the full sunshine of your kindliness has never shone on me before and given me its radiance."

"Oh," she exclaimed, "this is perfectly delicious! You talk just like a character in a novel."

"Is it novel for a man to love a beautiful woman?" I asked, looking squarely into her eyes, and thinking how much prettier than Miss Allen she was.

"Are you in love?" she asked, with charming naivete.

At this moment we were a hundred yards or more behind the party, and it was five minutes after 11 o'clock a. m.

"Oh, Myrtle," I said, with a fervor I did not think I was capable of, "don't you know that I am in love, and don't you know with whom? Haven't you seen every day for weeks that you held my heart in thrall, and that you were its queen? Don't you know, Myrtle, that I have been waiting for and wishing and hoping for the propitious time when I could tell you this? Now, I am soon to go back to my work, to the dark and dismal town, and before I go won't you give me your heart to take the place of mine you have taken away, that its light may make sunshine along all the paths of the future my footsteps may fall upon? Tell me, Myrtle, tell me?" And in my wild ardor I caught her hand in mine and kissed it.

"Oh," she exclaimed, snatching it away, "don't do that! They'll see us."

"What do I care?" I replied. "An honest love fears no criticism."

"I know, I know," she stammered, "but you mustn't talk love to me. I can't listen to you now. Jack Foster and I are engaged. He asked me yesterday and we are to be married in December."

And it was 15 minutes after 11 o'clock a. m.—Exchange.

A Liar From Liarsville.

A farmer living near Pulaski, while out walking across his farm one day last winter, shot a partridge, and on crossing the Shenango where the bird fell he stooped to pick it up, when something warm and of a mucilaginous consistency fell upon his head. This he soon found was honey, and examination discovered that the bullet from his gun had penetrated a bee tree after passing through the partridge. He returned to the house and secured three large tubs and two milk pails, all of which he filled with honey.

While securing the honey he noticed a peculiar movement of the tree, which seemed to expand and subside at intervals. Passing to the other side, a wide seam was apparent, and he learned that the tree was hollow. From this he succeeded in extracting 32 coons, which had taken up winter quarters therein, the peculiar movement of the tree having been caused by the united breathing of the coons.

Nor was this all of his remarkable adventure, for on attempting to cross the river the ice gave way, and he was obliged to swim for a short distance. When he arrived at his home, he had about 45 bass in his coat pockets, and a few had found lodgment in his boots.—New Wilmington (Pa.) Globe.

She Braved Criticism.

Lady Harberton's suggestion that female servants are the women of all others to wear knickerbockers, as such costume facilitates movement, seems to have been adopted in at least one case over the water. A very new woman in such reform dress recently rode through the streets of London accompanied by a nurse, also in knickerbockers, and a small infant in long clothes at the moment, but whose future attire, whatever the sex, may be set down as sure to be knickerbockers, under such mothering and nursing.

A Question of Expense.

"How will you have your eggs cooked?" asked the waiter.

"Make any difference in the cost of 'em?" inquired the cautious customer with the brimless hat and faded beard.

"No."

"Then cook 'em with a nice slice o' ham," said the customer, greatly relieved.—Chicago Tribune.

AT A TENEMENT WINDOW.

Sometimes my needle stops with half drawn thread.
(Not often, though. Each moment's waste means bread,
And missing stitches leave the little mouths unfed.)
I look down on the dingy court below.
A tuft of grass is all it has to show,
A broken pump where thirsty children go.
Above there shines a bit of sky so small
That it might be a passing bluebird's wing.
One tree leans up against the high brick wall,
And there the sparrows twitter of the spring
Until they waken in my heart a cry
Of hunger that no bread can satisfy.

Always before when May time took her way
Across the fields I followed close. Today
I can but dream of all her bright array.
My work drops down. Across the sill I lean
And long with bitter longing for unseen
Rain freshened paths where budding woods grow green.
The water trickles from the pump below
Upon the stones. With eyes half shut I hear
It falling in a pool where rushes grow
And feel a cooling presence drawing near.
And now the sparrows chirp again. No, hark!
A singing as of some far meadow lark.

It is the same old miracle applied
Unto myself, that on the mountain side
The few small loaves and fishes multiplied.
Behold how strange and sweet the mystery!
The birds, the broken pump, the gnarled tree
Have brought the fullness of the spring to me.
For in the leaves that rustle by the wall
All forests find a tongue. And so that grass
Can with its struggling tuft of green recall
Wide bloom filled meadows where the cattle pass.
How it can be but dimly I divine.
These crumbs, God given, make the whole loaf mine.

—Annie F. Johnston in Youth's Companion.

HER ALARM CLOCK.

And Why She Had Good Reason For Being Incensed Against It.

A suburban woman not long since purchased an alarm clock. It was a fat nickel plated little affair with the customary gong atop. The woman got the clock because she felt an overwhelming desire to play the role of the early bird. That night, therefore, she set the timepiece according to the specified directions. But for some reason or other the clock failed to go off. The woman gave it a second trial. Again it played her false. She took it to the suburban jeweler. He said the clock was outrageously out of order, hinted darkly at the dishonesty of any individual who would palm off such an article as perfect goods and prescribed a course of treatment which he would be gracious enough to administer for the sum of 75 cents. The clock's original cost had been $1.50.

The night that it came back from the suburban jeweler the woman wound it up with a feeling of unassailable security. This time the role of the early bird would be hers for certain. The next morning, however, it failed to go off, just as before. The woman took it back to the suburban jeweler, who received it with an "I told you that clock was terribly out of order." Encore, 75 cents.

Time passed, the clock, like the cat in the canticle, "came back," and the woman woke up (some hours later than she had intended) only to find that it hadn't "gone off" again. She now took the troublesome timepiece to the city jeweler from whom she had first purchased it. He declared the clock to have been all right until "ruined" by the suburban jeweler, but consented to repair it—also to charge $1 for so doing. The woman then bore it home in triumph.

Next morning, though, the same old drama was enacted, and the woman was once more unable to assume the role of the early bird. Had she been a man she might have sworn. As it was, she confided her woes to the breakfast tableful. "Why, that clock's been going off all the time," observed the woman who occupied the neighboring room to the clock owner. "It's waked me up every morning regularly. The trouble is it hasn't waked you."

Whereupon the woman felt more incensed against the clock than ever. To think of its having so little discrimination and discretion as to wake up the wrong person!—New York Sun.

The world of reality has its limits. The world of imagination is boundless. Not being able to enlarge the one, let us contract the other, for it is from their difference that all the evils arise which render us unhappy.—Rousseau.

It is said that the blind never dream of visible objects, and a mute has been observed when dreaming to carry on a conversation by means of his fingers or in writing.

THE T. G. C. Y.

If we take up a modern atlas and look over the map of the United States, we see the traceries of rivers and railroads so intertwined as to be confusing. But main stems and main streams are plainly lined. It is very much like a chart of the human system, with nerves and arteries well defined. Particularly do we see the G. S. N. (great Sciatic nerve), main stem, which can carry to the square inch more pain than some railroads carry in freight. A prominent business man in a big city was attacked by Sciatica. The pain was awful. He hurried home in fear that he would be crippled by it. In half an hour he was cured by St. Jacobs Oil. He now takes big stock in that famous remedy, and travels on the T. G. C. Y. (take good care of yourself) plan, keeping a bottle of the great pain cure always at hand.

"So you wouldn't take me to be twenty-five," tittered Miss Twitters. "What would you take me for, then?" "About thirty-six," replied inconsiderate Mr. Swayback.

Women on the Bicycle.

What a pretty thing a woman on a bicycle is! Her pose is good. She sits erect and rides easily, gracefully. Most men stoop while riding. Women sit erect. Men always seem to be on business bent and in a hurry. Women appear to ride for pleasure and in no hurry. Men have the bicycle face, arising, it is said, from the care they have to bestow to avoid accident. Women have the air of easy indifference, unconsciousness of risk. They ride as the true goddess walked.

FALSE WITNESSES.

There are knaves now and then met with who represent certain local bitters and poisonous stimuli as identical with or possessing properties akin to those of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. These scamps only succeed in foisting their trashy compounds upon people unacquainted with the genuine article, which is as much their opposite as day is to night. Ask and take no substitute for the grand remedy for malaria, dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

Austria has sent to our shores 123,000 of her population.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and, when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

DON'T BE TOO SURE.

You know it isn't going to rain—
There's blue and sunshine in the sky—
And so you leave at home again
The only thing to keep you dry.
No need of an umbrella when
It doesn't rain—oh, logic poor,
There comes a sudden shower. Then
Don't be too sure.

You've staked your earnings on a race—
That roan Bess can beat the gray.
You hurry to the booking place
And bet and raise your bets all day.
You'll go to Europe if you win,
Of racing this shall be the cure.
Alack, it is the gray comes in—
Don't be too sure.

Don't be too sure it's safe to cross
Upon a locomotive's time.
Don't count your gains without a loss,
Although such faith may be sublime.
Don't those erratic theories tell,
Their fatal smartness may allure.
Don't preach there isn't any—well,
Don't be too sure.

A MOTHER-IN-LAW.

"To put the matter plainly, Polly, it's come to this: Your mother must go. Upon that point I'm determined."

Jack Hadley saw the tears come into his wife's eyes as he spoke, but it had taken him too long to screw himself up to his present attitude to be lightly shaken from it, now it was reached. Therefore he pretended not to notice her and went on:

"You see how things stand. It is just three years since I made you my wife, and took you down to Bognor for that little wedding trip we both enjoyed so much. When, on our return from that all too short honeymoon, your mother proposed to come and spend a little time with us, I, for my part, I must admit—although somewhat averse to the principle of the thing—did not raise any objection to the proceeding, for, as we were necessarily new to the responsibilities of housekeeping and were making a fresh start in life, I deemed the experience of an older hand an advantage to us both and thought that you, Polly, in particular, would be glad to avail yourself of a mother's help in those domestic concerns which form such a large item in a young married woman's affairs."

He paused, momentarily, relieved at having thus far safely delivered himself of a speech that had taken much time to put together. His wife remained silent, and he continued:

"But when it came to weeks and then months, and your mother gave no indications of returning to the maternal abode, I began to consider if we were not having too much of a good thing, and whether it would not be better for us both if we could be left to ourselves and make the attempt to walk alone. This I have delicately suggested to your parent on several occasions, but she has refused to take the hint, and now, as I say, it has come to this—that she must be told plainly to go.

"You see, Polly," Jack went on, "your mother's not exactly an ordinary person. She's not content to adopt the attitude of a visitor and take a back seat. On the contrary, she keeps herself continually in the front, and even affects to rule. In truth, she does rule, for nothing is allowed to be done in this house unless her approval has been first obtained. If a new carpet is to be bought, your mother chooses the material. When the walls want repapering, it is she who selects the pattern. A picture cannot be hung without her first being consulted as to the position, and even in the preparing of the daily dinner, your mother's tastes and wishes always have the first consideration.

"I've had just about enough of it," he concluded, with a bit of unstudied candor, "and the thing must stop. As the old lady doesn't seem inclined to leave of her own free will, and refuses to take a gentle hint, she must be told to go in language that she cannot misunderstand."

"Then you must tell her," sobbed Polly, "for I cannot. It would break my heart."

Jack had hoped that the disagreeable task might be undertaken by his wife, who, with her natural womanly tact, would, he thought, be able to manage the affair a little more skillfully than he could hope to do, but, having put his hand to the plow, he was not going to turn back.

"Very well, then, Polly," he said airily. "I'll tell her myself tomorrow, whatever the consequences."

* * * * * * *

"Mother-in-law," said Jack, the next day, having found his opportunity, "I've got something particular to say, affecting yourself."

"Affecting me!" ejaculated the old lady, adjusting her spectacles in a neat little simulation of surprise. "Go on, my dear John; I'm all attention."

Jack screwed himself up, and went on:

"I—we—that is, your daughter Polly and I—have now been married three years"—

"Three years!" broke in the old lady. "Dear me! How the time flies! It hardly seems three months! Well?"

Jack didn't altogether like that "Well?" but seeing a chance of striking a hot iron went for it at once.

"It is three years, though," he said, "and you, mother-in-law, have lived with us all the time."

"Ah, yes, John, so I have," said the old lady blandly.

"And I—we, that is—have come to the conclusion that—that—we should now like to—to live alone."

The old lady straightened herself up briskly.

"Oh, John Hadley," she said stiffly, "I see what you mean. You want to turn me out of doors. Is that it?"

"Not exactly that," put in Jack deprecatingly. "We should never, of course, think of turning you out, but we certainly ventured to hope that you would probably see your way living at your own home in the future, as no doubt you intend to do."

"I quite understand, Mr. John Hadley," returned the mother-in-law freezingly. "It's just the same thing. I'm not a fool, and can put two and two together. Very well, it shall be as you wish—I will go to-day!"

"There is no need for such great haste," said Jack mildly. "A week or two, or three, would give you time to arrange your plans, and would quite suit ours."

"Enough; I go at once," said the old lady, moving toward the door, as if prepared to act instanter. "One word before I leave," she said, pausing at the threshold and speaking majestically. "You said 'we.' Do I understand that my daughter is a party to this little proceeding?"

"Your daughter, Mrs. Haslop," said Jack, stung into a commanding tone by the dignified demeanor of the old lady, "is my wife, and, as such, her first duty lies to her husband. Consequently, anything done by me or at my wish is equally her act."

"Thank you!" said the old lady, bowing herself out of the room.

Jack Hadley was surprised, but not altogether delighted, at the easy victory he had achieved. He had anticipated opposition, and was almost disappointed at finding none. However, all's well that ends well, and he successfully accomplished his purpose, for Polly's mother, true to her word, made a speedy exit from the house.

At first Jack and his wife missed the old lady greatly, for she had always been much in evidence. In fact, so lonely and solemn did the house now seem without her that Jack sometimes almost wished she hadn't gone, and as for Polly, she had many a good cry all to herself over the affair. As her husband, however, now made a point of spending less time at his club and more at home in her society, she could not help becoming reconciled to her loss. So, as the lonely feeling gradually wore off, and the young couple got used to the new order of things, Jack Hadley at length congratulated himself on having done the right thing at last.

Some three months later, when Jack was returning from business one day, he was met by his wife, whose swollen eyes told of something amiss.

"I have sad news to tell," she said, bursting into tears. "Mother has been taken suddenly ill and is dead. My poor mother!"

Jack at once set about assuaging his wife's grief. When she had sufficiently recovered, she imparted another bit of news, by far more important from his point of view.

"They tell me she has died rich. Worth £3,000, in fact."

"Three thousand pounds!" echoed Jack, in amazement. "Well, I'm blessed! Who'd have thought it? Why, I didn't know she had 3,000 pence!"

"Nor I," added Polly.

"Three thousand pounds!" repeated Jack thoughtfully. "And you're the only child, aren't you, Polly? You know," he went on, after a pause, "I don't much like that drawing room carpet of ours; do you? It's a faded pattern, and not a nice one. We want a new one badly, and a better. These curtains, too, are not at all up to the mark, to my way of thinking. And there's the dining room suit. I'm sure it begins to look quite shabby. Don't you think so? And, oh, Polly, as I was passing Streeter's, the other day, I saw a lovely little diamond brooch, which I should certainly have bought you had I been able to afford it. It's only 15 guineas, and would suit you admirably. Now, don't you fret about your mother, dear. It's what we must all expect—when we're old, you know. And take care that all the funeral arrangements are done decently and in order. I would never have it rest on my head that the dear old creature wasn't comfortably carried to the grave. Three thousand pounds! And Polly's the only child!"

The last sentence was not intended for his wife's ears, but she heard it, and it made her smile despite her grief.

When the funeral was over, Jack Hadley found himself one of a very small company gathered together in a little room, the most conspicuous object in which was a fussy lawyer, seated at a table with two open documents spread out before him.

"This," said the man of law, coming at once to business and holding up one of the papers, "is the last will and testament of the deceased Sarah Juliana Haslop, widow. It bears date, April 3, 1881"—

"A week before she left us," murmured Jack, under his breath.

—"and runs as follows," continued the lawyer. "'I hereby give and bequeath to my son-in-law, John Hadley, and my daughter Marianne, his wife, the sum of £3,000 sterling now standing to my credit at the Bank of England, with power to use and employ the same for their mutual benefit.'"

"The dear old soul!" exclaimed Jack, only restrained by an innate sense of propriety from shying his hat to the ceiling.

"And this," said the representative of red tape, taking up document No. 2, "is a codicil, executed exactly 14 days later"—

"A week after she left us," gasped Jack.

"It is not of great length, and runs as follows: 'I hereby cancel and revoke all my former wills whensoever and wheresoever made and substitute therefor this the final expression of my intentions. To my daughter, Marianne Hadley, I give and bequeath the sum of £10 sterling, to enable her to buy suitable mourning to wear at my decease; to my son-in-law, John Hadley, her husband, in consideration of his kindness to me in turning me out of his house at a time when I had thoughts of leaving on my own account, I make a present of 1s. in current coin of the realm, and the whole of the residue of my property, howsoever acquired, I bequeath to the governors of Guy's hospital, in London, to form a fund to be applied to the special care and treatment of afflicted mothers-in-law.'"

"The spiteful old cat!" growled Jack, between his teeth. "May she"— He checked himself, and taking up his hat sorrowfully, walked homeward, a "sadder and a wiser man."

Years have passed since then, and Jack Hadley, among other things, has developed an inveterate and irremediable taciturnity, but if any one wishes to "draw" him effectually for the nonce, it is only necessary to mention the subject of mothers-in-law in general and his own in particular.—London Tit-Bits.

He Complied.

They are telling a story at the expense of a very charming young North Carolina girl, who lives here. It runs this way: The girl, as I said, is charming, but like a great many other charming people she is poor. She never has more than two evening gowns in a season, and the ruin of one of them is always a very serious matter to her. She went to a little dancing party, and she wore a brand new white frock. During the evening a great, big, red faced, perspiring man came up and asked her to dance. He wore no gloves. She looked at his well meaning but moist hands despairingly and thought of the immaculate back of her waist. She hesitated a bit, and then she said, with a winning simle:

"Of course I'll dance with you, but if you don't mind—won't you please use your handkerchief?"

The man looked at her blankly a moment or two. Then a light broke over his face.

"Why, certainly," he said.

And he pulled out his handkerchief and blew his nose.—Washington Post.

Awning Cloth For Chairs and Sofas.

The sturdy, enduring awning cloth is a popular material for sofa and divan covers. It comes in dull blue and white, in blue and deep creams, in soft browns and in old reds and in ecru. It is attractive, and the colors will not fade. It is the very thing for upholstering the wide seat of the big bay window, where it will get hard usage and look none the worse for wear, until in the course of time it becomes ready for the laundress, when it will arise from the foaming suds phenixlike and as good as new. For piazza cushions and hammock pillows it is the most desirable, but those should always be made with slip covers.—Upholsterer.

MEALS FOR CLERKS.

EMPLOYEES OF LARGE PARIS STORES DINE IN THE BUILDING.

A Tremendous Business In Itself When You Consider the Meals That Are Prepared and Served—Everything Is Done In First Class Style, but It Pays.

The refectories of the vast department stores or "bazaars" of Paris are among the most curious sights of the French capital. As soon as the Bon Marche and the Louvre—dear to the hearts of all American women who make the "grand tour" and prototypes of the colossal establishments in New York and adjacent cities—began to assume great importance their projectors were confronted with the question, "How shall we organize the 'meal times' of these thousands of men and women?"

In France "lunch," as understood in America, is unknown. Every person, gentle and simple, makes of the early morning repast simply a "break-fast" and no more. A bowl of coffee and a large piece of crisp bread for the workingman and woman; the smoking chocolate in a Sevres cup and the brioches which melt in the mouth for the millionaire—those are the only distinctions. For many generations the French have recognized that it is unhealthy to take a hearty meal at 6, 7 or 8 in the morning. So they wait until 11 or 12, and millions wait until 1 o'clock before tasting the first substantial meal of the day. Dinner, a second meal of two or three courses, and in no wise resembling the light repast which Americans know as "supper," comes at 7, 8 or even 9, according to the circumstances of the person. Concierges, or house porters, generally dine at 9, winter and summer, and sit over their meal an hour or two, chatting and laughing. At that late hour the whole family is united, and its little affairs are discussed and settled.

With the organization of the "bazaar" came the need of keeping a constant outlook over the hundreds of young men and women in each department, and economizing each moment of their time between the opening hours and the letting down of the great iron shutters before the immense windows at 6 p. m. precisely. It was with a view of this watch over the employees, rather than because of any philanthropic tendencies, that the owners and managers of the largest "bazaars" decided to make it obligatory for all employees to take their meals at noon and night upon the premises.

The bazaar proprietor said, "We must do this, as we do everything else, with an eye to the advertisement." And so they decided to install their refectories very handsomely and to feed their employees well. The idea has paid from the start.

At the Bon Marche spacious and very handsome halls on the fourth story of the enormous edifice are devoted to the restaurant for the employees. Twelve thousand meals are served daily between 11 and 6 o'clock. Men and women eat in separate halls, and are served with the same politeness and attention that they would receive in restaurants or at "lunch counters"—if lunch counters had ever been inflicted on the French.

At the Louvre about the same number of meals are served, and the arrangements are wonderfully complete. The kitchens, with their seductive array of copper saucepans, and the pantries, with the thousands upon thousands of plates and cups, all marked with the trade mark of the house—a majestic lion couchant, with his paws hanging over the letter "L"—and the little army of white capped and aproned cooks, waiters, bottle washers and potato peelers, are well worth a visit. Nor will the visitor get his back chalked. All is conducted with dignity and refinement, as in the house of a gentleman of fortune.

The caldrons in the kitchens are immense. The visitor may look into one kettle which contains mashed potatoes for 3,000 men, and into another in which soup for 5,000 persons is simmering. Then the bottle department is something stupendous. Twelve thousand half bottles of good wine, guaranteed unadulterated, are served out daily. The battalion of bottle washers is busy from dawn to dusk, fetching up the rosy liquid or the yellowish white wine in huge pitchers of wood three feet high, and then bottling it. Both the Louvre and the Bon Marche have wine cellars of vast extent for customers as well as employees.

At the Louvre there are three table services of 700 each for the men. At the Bon Marche a larger number can be fed at once. Each category of employees has its special room. The heads of departments dine together, and never mix with the head clerks of each counter. The under clerks eat their boiled beef and roast chicken without being troubled by the presence of their chiefs. Then the humbler ones, the packers, the stablemen, the elevator men, the runners, the sweepers and lighters, have their long table, and finally, the garcons, or the men who wear the uniform of the house and accompany the delivery wagons and receive money for purchases, have their particular room, and are allowed to come and go more irregularly than the others because of the peculiar nature of their service. The "ladies" observe the same classification in their eating rooms, and are allowed to gossip as freely as they will. There are no spies; they say what they please on the theory that they are not under the control of the establishment during the time of the repasts.—Paris Letter in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Inclined to Assist Him.

"You don't object to a contributor dropping into poetry once in awhile, I presume?" said the caller, with an affable smile.

"Certainly not, sir. Sit down," replied the editor, pushing the waste basket toward him.—Chicago Tribune.

BREAKING A MIRROR.

Its Significance to the Girl With a Superstitious Turn.

"There," said the girl who was getting ready to go out, "I've broken my hand mirror! What does that mean?"

"Seven years of sorrow," said her friend. "It also betokens that you will quarrel with your dearest friend."

"Charlie? That would be too dreadful!"

"Charlie? I thought you always counted me your dearest friend? So you have let the cat out of the bag! That pudding headed Charlie Strong! Before I'd"—

"You needn't say anything more, Sue Garland. I hate you! And as for Charlie, you know you would have given your eyes to have caught him!"

"Pooh! I refused him half a dozen times before he ever looked at you. I wish you good afternoon and a better temper, my dear!" and the friend slammed the door behind her.

There were several other girls left, and they one and all began to condole with the girl who had broken her hand mirror. But she was inconsolable.

"You see how it has acted already, and if there are to be seven years of it I shall just die, I know I shall! There, I've quarreled with Sue, the dearest girl in the world, and that's only the beginning!"

"Let me see where it's broken," said one of her chums, as she picked up the cause of the trouble.

"There's a fracture right through the length of the glass, but I don't know how it came there. I didn't drop it or strike it against anything. Seven years! Ain't it just awful?"

"Seven grandmothers!" exclaimed the other girl. "That isn't a fracture. It's nothing but a streak of moist air. Look, I can wipe it off with my handkerchief!"

"So it is. Oh, you dear thing! Run right after Sue and bring her back. Tell her the glass wasn't broken and we haven't quarreled after all! And the seven years are up already, and, oh, ain't I just thankful"—Detroit Free Press.

KENTUCKY HUMOR.

Some Anecdotes of Humphrey Marshall, Soldier and Congressman.

Edward J. McDermott, in an article entitled "Fun on the Stump" in The Century, relates the following:

Just before the war Humphrey Marshall was a great debater in congress. During the war he was a Confederate general. He was very large and stout—a veritable Falstaff. At the breaking out of the war he wrote to an officer of the north and warned him not to invade the sacred soil of Kentucky, for if he did he would have to pass over the dead body of Humphrey Marshall. The northern officer replied: "Dear general, we won't pass over your dead body. We prefer to tunnel through."

After the war the general had a good practice, but he was extravagant and often in need of money. Once he was dogged by a collector who had been put off dozens of times. At last the collector said: "General, you have said to me time after time: 'I cannot pay you this week. Come next.' Now, I can't afford to be coming here all the time. You must fix the day. When will you be able to pay me?" "D—n it, sir," said the general, "do you think I am a prophet?"

When the general was running for congress against Mr. Blank, after the war, he tried to draw out Mr. Blank's exact opinions by a close debate on the stump. In such an intellectual conflict few men could compete with Humphrey Marshall. Mr. Blank parried and fenced as well as he could. Finally Marshall said one evening in his ponderous tones and impressive manner:

"Fellow citizens, I have tried to pin Mr. Blank down and make him give me a fair statement of his opinions and principles, but he flits about so nimbly that it is impossible to follow him in an argument. In dodging a debate he reminds me of a bobolink flitting along a zigzag worm fence, hopping or flying, first on one side of the fence and then on the other, until the mind is bewildered, and it is impossible to tell on which side he is at any moment."

Father Ducey.

There are few clergymen or priests in this city who have the wide acquaintance and influence of Father Ducey of St. Leo's Roman Catholic church. Father Ducey's influence is by no means limited to persons of his own faith. A friend recently told me a story illustrating the priest's methods. According to my friend, Father Ducey entered Delmonico's cafe one night not long ago and walking up to a party of wealthy gentlemen seated at one of the tables said: "I have just come from a visit to a family, one member of which is at the point of death. The family is destitute. I want $100 from you gentlemen." In a moment each member of the party had handed the priest a bank note, and he walked out with the $100, which he took, although it was almost midnight, directly to the afflicted family. Not one of the men who contributed the money was a Catholic.—New York World.

The Isom Sloans of Kentucky.

There is an awful warning to those parents who continue to name children after their relatives. Up in Knott county, on Caney creek, the practice has been carried to an excess, and the result is that the Sloan family numbers among its members the following: Big Isom Sloan, Hard's Isom, Son's Isom, Isom's Isom, Jailer Isom, Sorrel Head Isom, Jim's Isom, Little Isom, Andy's Isom, Summ's Isom, Jimbo's Isom, Big Isom's Isom and Sorrel Head Isom's Isom.—Louisville Post.

Identical With the Bible.

A Babylonian tablet in the British museum which has been deciphered has an account of the death of King Sennacherib almost identical with that in the Bible (II Kings, xix, 37).—Philadelphia Record.

MANY CLAY EATERS.

VARIOUS PEOPLES WHO HAVE USED THE SOIL AS FOOD.

In Some Places the Custom Is Observed Only as a Ceremonial, but Generally the Purpose Is to Sustain Life—Indians and Africans Great Clay Eaters.

Among the extraordinary passions for eating uncommon things must be reckoned that which some peoples exhibit for eating earth or clay. Of this practice, which would appear to have once prevailed all over the world, numerous examples were cited by Captain J. G. Bourke, United States army, in the ninth annual report of the bureau of ethnology. In some places the custom has degenerated into a ceremonial, while in others the eating of this strange food still prevails as a kind of necessity to the lives of those who are addicted to it.

The Mexican devotees picked up a piece of clay in the temple of Tezcatlipoca and ate it with the greatest reverence, and also ate a piece of earth in swearing by the sun and earth. But the use of clay by the Mexicans was not merely a matter of ceremony, for it seems to have been an esculent in common use. Edible earth was sold openly in the markets of Mexico and appears in the list of foods given by Gomara.

Cabeza de Vaca says that the Indians of Florida ate clay, and that the natives offered him many mesquite beans, which they ate mixed with earth. Venegas asserts that the Indians of California ate earth. The traditions of the Indians of San Juan Capistrano and vicinity show that they had fed upon a kind of clay, which they often used upon their heads by way of ornament. The Tatu Indians of California, according to Powers, mix red earth into their acorn bread to make the latter sweet and cause it to go further.

Sir John Franklin relates that the banks of the Mackenzie river contain layers of a kind of unctuous mud, which the Tinneh Indians use as food during the seasons of famine and even at other times chew as an amusement. It has a milky taste, and the flavor is not disagreeable. The Apache and Navajo branches of the Athabascan family of North American Indians are not unacquainted with the use of clay as a comestible, although among the former it is now rarely used and among the latter is employed only as a condiment to relieve the bitterness of the taste of the wild potato. In the same manner it is known to both the Zuni and the Tusayan.

In South America, likewise, the eating of clay prevails among the Indians on the banks of the Orinoco, throughout Brazil and on the mountains of Bolivia and Peru.

In western Africa the negroes of Guinea have long been known to eat a yellowish earth called by them "caouac," and the flavor and taste of which is very agreeable to them and said to cause them no inconvenience. Some addict themselves so excessively to the use of it that it becomes to them a real necessity, and no punishment is sufficient to restrain them from the practice of consuming it.

When the Guinea negroes were in former times carried as slaves to the West India islands, they were observed to continue the custom of eating clay. But the "caouac" of the American islands, or the substance which the poor negroes attempted to substitute in their new homes for the African earth, was found to injure the health of the slaves who ate it, and so the practice was long ago forbidden and has possibly now died out in the West India colonies. In Martinique a species of red earth or yellowish tufa was formerly secretly sold in the markets, but the use of it has probably ceased in the French colonies also.

In eastern Asia a similar practice prevails in various places. In the island of Java, between Sourabaya and Samarang, Labillardiere saw small, square, reddish cakes of earth sold in the village for the purpose of being eaten. These were found by Ehrenberg to consist, for the most part, of the remains of microscopic animals and plants which had lived and been deposited in fresh water. Some of the Japanese, too, are addicted to the practice of eating earth. Dr. Love, some time ago, published an analysis of a clay which is eaten to a considerable extent by the Ainos. It occurs in a bed several feet thick in the valley of Tsietonai (Eat Earth valley), on the north coast of Yesso.

It is light gray in color and of fine structure. The people mix with the clay fragments of the leaf of some plant for the aromatic principle it contains. They eat the earth because they think it contains some beneficial substance, not because it is a necessity with them. They have meat and abundance of vegetable food. The clay is eaten in the form of a soup. Several pounds are boiled with lily roots in a small quantity of water and afterward strained. The Ainos pronounce the soup very palatable.

In northern Europe, especially in the remote northern parts of Sweden, a kind of earth known by the name of "bread meal" is yearly consumed by hundreds of cartloads, it is said. A similar earth is commonly mixed with bread in Finland. In both these cases the earth employed consists for the most part of the empty shells of minute infusoria in which there cannot exist any ordinary nourishment.

Some of the Silerian tribes when they travel carry a small bag of their native earth, the taste of which they suppose will preserve them from all the evils of a foreign sky. We are told that the Tunguses of Siberia eat a clay called "rock marrow," which they use mixed with marrow. Near the Ural mountains powdered gypsum, commonly called "rock meal," is sometimes mixed with bread. The Jukabiri of northeastern Siberia have an earth of a sweetish and rather stringent taste, to which they ascribe a variety of sanitary properties when eaten.

In north Germany on various occasions where famine or necessity has urged it, as in long protracted sieges of fortified places, a substance called "mountain meal," similar to that used in Sweden and Finland, has been employed as a means of staying hunger.

According to Pliny, the Romans had a dish called "alica" or "frumenta," made of the grain zea mixed with chalk from the hills of Puleoli, near Naples.

According to the myths of the Cingalese, their Brahmans once fed upon earth for the space of 60,000 years.—Philadelphia Press.

Fond of Adornment.

The Germans in former times were fond of adorning their persons as well as their houses. The women wore necklaces, bracelets, rings and charms or amulets of gold, silver, brass or amber. They had buckles and clasps for their capes. They adorned their clothing with rude embroidery. The men at least and possibly the women colored their hair red, and Pliny speaks of a hair dye much used at Rome which was imported from Germany.

A FAMOUS WINTER RESORT.

An Alpine Village That Is Without Inhabitants Most of the Year.

St. Moritz-Bad, which is situated about a mile from St. Moritz-Dorf, the well known winter Alpine resort, is a town composed almost exclusively of gigantic hotels, mammoth boarding houses, or, to give them their more polite appellation, pensions and gargantuan villas. In the summer it is crammed with people, holiday makers and invalids, who come to drink its healing waters, drawn together from all points of the compass and representing divers nationalities, but in the winter it is shut up and deserted. No one lives there but a solitary caretaker or two, and the town becomes as silent as and three times more cold than the proverbial sepulcher.

The reason of this exodus is of course due to the fact that St. Moritz-Bad occupies a position which renders it far too cold a spot to be capable of sustaining a human population during the winter time. The town is built on a level stretch of ground close to the lake of St. Moritz and so closely hemmed in by surrounding mountains that the sun scarcely touches it at all for six months out of 12. Paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless true that this unique little town of gigantic hotels, mammoth pensions and gargantuan villas is only, strictly speaking, inhabited by the people for whom it was exclusively built—that is to say, for holiday makers and invalids—for about six or seven weeks out of the 52 that constitute the solar year. The rest of that time it is shut up—deserted—and nothing save business or curiosity could tempt a man to set foot in it.

The effect upon mind and imagination as you force your way through the huge masses of snow that encumber the streets of St. Moritz-Bad in winter time must be somewhat similar to that which explorers narrate their experience on first setting foot within the mysterious circles of the arctic regions. It is to be observed, however, that in the latter case this gloom and silence, which fall like a pall, as it were, upon the awed spectator and strike him dumb with fear and admiration, are unaccompanied by any of the signs and emblems of human habitation, and, therefore, though weird and terrible, are natural enough. In the former those two feelings become intensified, and by consequence their effects upon the imagination, by reason of their being experienced amid all the signs of human life and business and in the hearts, as it were, of a real though latent vitality.

The huge hotels, with their closely shuttered windows, smokeless chimneys and general appearance of chronic neglect, resemble nothing so much as deserted palaces from which all signs of life have been cut off, all movement expressive of vitality effectually banished by reason of pestilence, crime or some other dreadful calamity. The snow lies several feet deep upon the pathways that lead to them and upon the roofs of these gigantic buildings. The shops on the quaint little main street hard by are securely closed for the winter and to all intents and purposes are signless.

The caretakers—a sleepy, idle tribe, whose sole diversion seems to consist in being snowed up and occasionally dug out again—spend their time in dreaming one-half the day and sleeping soundly the rest. The watchdog's bark is probably the only sound that penetrates to their ears, but when night falls—and it falls with a swiftness and icy vengeance at St. Moritz-Bad, of which only those who have experienced it can possess any adequate notion—and all sound is stilled and all movement effectually stifled beneath the iron heel of King Frost, then is the illusion made complete, and the stranger realizes at once that he is face to face, as it were, with a genuine deserted village.—Pall Mall Budget.

Game to the Last.

The pluck for which English people are noted is an admirable quality. It has carried them through a good many tough matches at home and abroad. A sketch of the late Lord Drayton shows us an amusing exhibition of this national characteristic.

The author of the sketch was accompanying the earl, then 85 years of age, down the stairs to see him safely into his cab. On descending the stairs they were met by a cheery old gentleman, little of stature, Mr. John Levien, who was slowly ascending, hat in hand, mopping the dew off his bald head with his pocket handkerchief.

The writer, knowing that both his friends, strangers to each other, were proud of their ages, said to them as they met on the stairs:

"Let me introduce a gentleman of 85 to a gentleman of 82."

"Eighty-two, sir!" echoed the earl, slightly lifting his hat to Mr. Levien. "I'll run you round the square for a fiver."

Some days afterward Mr. Levien called on the writer again and remarked slowly and with much solemnity: "I've been thinking a great deal about that challenge. I wish I had taken it."—Youth's Companion.

Weddings and Funerals In China.

Strangers in China have the greatest difficulty when meeting a funeral or wedding procession on the street to distinguish one from the other. The same red cloth coolies, carrying roasted pig and other dainties, appear in the procession, the same smaller coolies, carrying cheap paper ornaments, and the same noisy turnout, and all this when some old person is being carried to his last resting place, as when the youngest and most beautiful Celestial maiden is being carried to the new home prepared by her husband. The crowd at the funeral is as noisy as at a wedding, and the guests eat just as much. The only difference indeed between the two is that in the center of one the bride is carried in an inclosed sedan chair, borne on the shoulders of some men, and followed by her birdesmaids. In that of the other the coffin is carried, and the mourners follow. Indeed an English writer says that no event in the life of a Chinaman is half so important as his funeral.—Detroit Free Press.

Peau d'Espagne.

Paris is the great market place for peau d'espagne. The sachets can be bought in any first class drug store, but the Parisians alone know where to get the skin with the exquisite and indefinable odor. It looks like kid. Squares 1½ inches in surface retail at $1.50. These are cut into strips one-quarter of an inch wide and sewed in the seams of the evening dresses. Usually five are put in a toilet—one under each sleeve, two in the side gores of the skirt, about the knee line and one at the back in the hem. Peau d'espagne never loses its scent.—New York World.

The Professional Beverage.

Waiter—Will you take tea or coffee?

Actor—I always take coffee, because it settles.

Manager—I prefer tea, because it draws!—Hallo.

CHEW ALL YOUR FOOD

FACTS IN DIGESTION AND HABITS THAT DISTURB IT.

"Salivary Indigestion" and Its Causes. Abundant Use of Sweets Is Very Bad. Strong Acids on Cereal Foods Objectionable—Shun Ices and Cold Water.

The necessity of carefully chewing the food is popularly considered to rest upon the advisability of separating it into small portions, so that when it reaches the stomach it may be better acted upon by the gastric juice. But important as this is, there is another reason—namely, the necessity of mixing the food well with the saliva, which has its own part to play in the digestive organs. It is just as necessary therefore to chew foods that are already minced or pulverized as those that require separation with the teeth, and failure to do so properly results in indigestion. In Modern Medicine an interesting article deals with the evils resulting from imperfect mastication, which it calls "Salivary Indigestion."

At the outset our attention is called to the fact that accurate knowledge on the subject was for a time actually obscured by an important discovery. Leuchs, about 60 years ago, found that saliva converts starch into sugar. To this fact indeed its value is due, since the gastric juice will not digest starch directly. But since the saliva will not act upon starch thus when rendered acid it was at once concluded that it could have no useful digestive qualities, since the food remained such a short time in the mouth and the gastric juice of the stomach is powerfully acid. Recent investigations have shown, however, that at the beginning of digestion the fluid contains no free acid, and that the digestive power of saliva goes on increasing till its alkaline qualities are actually neutralized. Hence it has half an hour or so to act—ample time for its purpose. The article goes on to say:

"During the half or three-quarters of an hour which intervenes between the swallowing of the food and the production of a degree of acidity sufficient to prevent the action upon the starch through the appearance of free hydrochloric acid very active conversion of starch is taking place. If the food has been thoroughly masticated, so that it is broken up into fine particles, thus also insuring an admixture of an abundant quantity of saliva, the great share of the starch elements of the food will be rendered soluble by conversion into dextrin, even if not completely converted into sugar, thus setting free the nitrogenous elements which may be acted upon by the gastric juice in their turn.

"It must not be forgotten also that the saliva is the most active peptogen—that is, the presence of saliva in the stomach, in connection with the food, stimulates glandular activity on the part of the stomach, whereby an active and abundant supply of gastric juice is produced.

"Another cause of salivary indigestion which we should mention is the abundant use of sweets. In order that the saliva shall exercise its properties efficiently it is necessary that it should act in a suitable medium. A temperature of 100 degrees and an alkaline or neutral reaction are necessary for prompt and vigorous action on the part of the saliva upon the farinaceous elements of food. A low temperature hinders this action and acidity stops it altogether. The presence of a large amount of sugar also hinders the action of the saliva.

"It is thus evident that the copious drinking of cold water, or the taking of iced foods in connection with meals, is a means of producing salivary indigestion. The free use of strong acids, such as vinegar, in connection with cereal foods, is equally objectionable. Nothing could be more absurd than the combination of strong acids with vegetable elements, as in pickles. This is probably the reason why so many persons find themselves unable to use acid fruits without fermentation. The acidity may be sufficient to neutralize the action of the saliva upon the starch.

"Evidently it is not only psychologically absurd to add sugar to farinaceous foods, since the starch, which composes one-half the weight of these foods, is all converted into sugar in the process of digestion, but the practice is also highly injurious, since it prevents the normal action of the saliva upon the starch. In this way sugar, preserves, sweet sauces, confectionery, ice cream, cakes and other sweets are in the highest degree conducive to salivary indigestion. The consequences of salivary indigestion are: Acid fermentations, heartburn, stomach and intestinal colic, dilation of the stomach, catarrh of the stomach and many evil effects arising from these conditions.

"The remedy for salivary indigestion consists in prohibiting sweets, ices and soft foods and requiring patients to masticate thoroughly every particle of food swallowed. In many cases it is well to aid the process of salivary digestion by exposing the cereal food substances to the prolonged action of heat, thereby converting the starch into dextrin, rendering it more readily soluble, and hence more readily acted upon by the saliva. Granola and swieback are invaluable articles of food for use in cases of this sort. The malt preparations are useful as palliatives in some cases, but it should be remembered that it is wrong to become dependent upon any artificial digestive agent."

Turn About.

"What are you so much worried about the future of the country for?" asked Mr. Smiggles. "Haven't you got enough to bother you right here at home?"

"Yes, John," she answered, "but I thought that after 25 years of married life it was about time for me to take my turn at saving the country, while you did some of the speculating on where the kindling and grocery money was coming from."—Washington Star.

The bond syndicate formed J. by P erpont Morgan for the purpose of selling to the Government $200,000,000 in gold, presents a striking instance of the patriotism which prevails in financial circles in New York. The subscribers to Mr. Morgan's syndicate propose to sell to President Cleveland as much gold as he needs for maintaining the Treasury reserve, taking in exchange coin bonds at about 105 3-4 These bonds will sell in open market, if they run thirty years, for about 117. This will give the syndicate a profit of 11 per cent, or $11,000,000 on the first $100,000,000 in gold turned into the Treasury, Mr. Morgan declines to make any arrangements for maintaining the Treasury reserve. He will sell the gold outright and let the government take its chances. This means that as soon as the bankers who enter into this deal have extorted the bonds from the President, they will at once proceed to send in their greenbacks for redemption and again deplete the Treasury reserve. In course of time they will again have the Government in a "hole," when they will generously offer to sell the gold over. Nothing in the shape of "finance" could equal this proposition in downright effrontery. It is the boldest scheme of highway robbery of which history furnishes any illustration. That a lot of men should take advantage of their own Government's misfortune to thus "cinch" it only proves that not alone patriotism, but common decency, has departed from "Wall street" But as if this exhibition of "Americanism" were not enough, it is perfectly plain that Congress is standing in to help the deal along. The demagogues rascals and imbeciles who represent the people in the lower House know that President Cleveland is in the door. They know that if he is to maintain specie payments as the law directs he must keep the Treasury reserve intact, and yet they camly stand by and see the Government robbed through the endless ribbon greenback device without making the slightest attempt to prevent it. The motives which actuate some of these men are the meanest. Many of them think that by putting the President in a "hole" they may win the next Presidential election. They are willing to sanction highway robbery in order to get the offices.

The desire of a man may be ever so great for a commodity, but unless he has the money with which to purchase, his need does not constitute a demand that will effect prices. Men penniless and without credit may suffer the pangs of hunger with abundance of food in sight and for sale, but so long as they have not the wherewith to purchase their need for food will not constitute any demand. So if the money in our pocket should be reduced one half we would find our ability likewise curtailed. So cut the money in the pockets of everyone in half would be to cut the demand for commodities at all prices also in half, for there would be only sufficient money in the hands of those desirous of exchanging the money for produce to buy one half of the commodities for sale. The supply of commodities thus becoming double the demand, prices would necessarily fall, as competition for a market among owners of produce become more and more severe, and continue falling until prices had fallen one-half. This is exactly what has occured by the demonetization of silver.

The effort to reduce the letter postage one-half should be postponed until the Government once more rejoices in the possession of a surplus. The deficiency in the postal department will have to be made up from some other source, and people will be as well able to pay the two-cent rate in 1896 as they were in 1895, and to create this change in the postal revenue would simply be taking the money from one pocket to put in another.

WHAT IS GRAVITATION?

Some Examples That Seem to Answer the Weighty Question.

Two men at antipodes on the earth's surface are drawn directly toward each other. Each is at the apex of a cone of the other. These cones interlock at the earth's center and are there equal, but the greater part of the mass of each cone and consequently the greater mass of gravity holding each to his place is past the center of the earth and culminates at the feet of the other.

Every point of the earth's surface pulls in a straight line through the center of the earth, not stopping at it; losing part of the pound in proportion as it approaches the center; then, passing, regaining it again in proportion as it approaches the opposite surface. So that half way past the center the pound which at the center was nothing has now become a half pound, and at the antipodal surface a pound again.

Make the center of the earth the common apex of an indefinite number of cones radiating to the surface. According to mass, gravity pulls from the center, and the center is again the point of nugation.

If gravity is an active essence produced by molecular motion, if being a living essence, it is therefore a perishable one, it follows that in a conglomerate mass, as the earth, some substances will probably exhaust sooner than others by reason of expiration of molecular activity, if that be its producer, or from other or any cause. Being an active expending force, it must have a producer, and that producer must have supplies of force producing matter. These supplies, however great, must exhaust. Different qualities of matter may contain this force producing quality in differing degrees and qualities. If so, the minor will sooner exhaust. A feather, a leaden ball and a dry stick will fall through space to our atmosphere with equal speed because their atoms and the atoms of the earth mutually attract each other regardless of shape or size. Gravity is atomic, and every atom is the equal of every other atom, no matter how diffuse or how concrete the mass of the object of which they are parts. But the dry stick may have lost its active principle—gravity. Its essence producing principles may have been exhausted. Nevertheless it would be grasped by the overwhelming gravity of the earth and brought down in company with its fellows.

Gravity pulls laterally as well as perpendicularly. The weight of the earth has been calculated from the pull of a mountain on a plumb line.

A person standing in a narrow canyon, with walls towering hundreds or thousands of feet above him on either side, has much better footing than if on the pinnacle of a monument. In one case he is held up by lateral gravity, in the other he is without support.—R. W. Musser in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Wearing of Glass Eyes.

It is a fallacy to suppose that people who wear cork legs and glass eyes are indifferent to their personal appearance. They are often vainer than ordinary individuals.

A rich man, for instance, who is obliged to wear an artificial eye will wear three different eyes every day—an eye for morning, when the pupil is not very large; an eye for afternoon, when the pupil is smaller; an eye for evening, when the pupil has extended to its full size.

A London eyemaker, who gave this information, said he made about an equal proportion of glass eyes for men and women. Some people keep quite a stock in their possession. In fact, no less than 12 eyes have been made by my informant for one gentleman within three months.

His son had got one eye made from measurement, and that eye fitted so perfectly that the old gentleman, in an outburst of gratitude, wrote off for 11 other eyes. The eyemaker admitted that this was an exceptional instance.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Too Smart For the Doctor.

The daughter of a well known jockey was very ill, having caught a severe cold. A doctor was sent for and was buttonholed by the mother, who requested him to favor her by advising her daughter not to wear low ankled shoes.

The daughter was sent for, and, after her tongue had been given the usual out of door exercise, the man of medicine said:

"Ah, you are suffering from what we medical men call a low shoe cold, and I must prohibit you from wearing such shoes in the future."

The young lady started, and, taking off one of the offending shoes, exclaimed:

"Since you are so clever, doctor, as to look at my tongue and tell me what is amiss with my feet, will you be kind enough to look at my feet and tell me whether my fringe is properly adjusted?"

He gave up prescribing for smart girls.—London Tit-Bits.

At a German Court Martial.

Captain (presiding)—Then I am to understand that the accused offered you a cigar when you were doing sentry duty?

"And you declined?"

"Yes, to command, your honor."

"And what reply did he make?"

"'You are an ass,' your honor."—Kolnische Volkszeitung.

THE NUMBER THREE.

Some Curious Superstitions Regarding It In the Popular Mind.

There is a superstitious regard for the number three in the popular mind, and the third repetition of anything is generally looked upon as a crisis. Thus an article may twice be lost and recovered, but the third time that it is lost it is gone for good. Twice a man may pass through some great danger in safety, but the third time he loses his life. If, however, the mystic third can be successfully passed, all is well. Three was called by Pythagoras the perfect number, and we frequently find its use symbolical of Deity. Thus we might mention the trident of Neptune, the three forked lightning of Jove and three headed dog of Pluto. The idea of trinity is not confined to Christianity, but occurs in several religions.

In mythology also we find three fates, three furies and three graces, and, coming nearer to our own times, Shakespeare introduces his three witches. In public house signs three seems to play an important part, for we frequently meet with "Three Cups," "Three Jolly Sailors," "Three Bells," "Three Tuns," "Three Feathers"—in fact, the number of almost anything of which a fertile imagination can conceive a trio. In nursery rhymes and tales this number is not unknown, and if we look back to the days of our childhood most of us will call to mind the three wise men of Gotham who took a sea voyage in a bowl, not to mention the three blind mice that had their tails cut off by the farmer's wife. Perhaps there is some occult power in the number which governs the division of novels into three volumes and induces doctors to order their medicine to be taken thrice daily. It is said that some tribes of savages cannot count beyond three. But, although they may have no words to express higher numbers, perhaps we should be scarcely justified in assuming that they are incapable of appreciating the value of the latter.—New York Advertiser.

Miss Jennie Baxter has gone to Bishop to attend the Academy.

C. B. Rawson was down from Bishop a couple of days this week.

Mrs. M. E. Curtis of Big Pine spent several days in town this week.

Mrs. W. M. Richards returned to Keeler to-day after a week's visit with friends in this vicinity.

Judge Arnot will return to Alpine tomorrow, having completed what Court business ther was on hand here.

Mrs. H. Levy will start for San Francisco next Tuesday, where she will remain for several months visiting relatives.

E. Robinson has been appointed Horticultural Commissioner for Inyo County for 1896. The Board has made a good selection.

W. A. Lamar Esq. will arrive home this evening from San Jose, where he has been for the past month visiting with relatives.

Henry Rhine went south last Friday on his way to Los Angeles and San Francisco. He expects to be gone several months.

The Board of Supervisors yesterday reduced the sheep license tax to 2½ cents a head, this amount being one-half of the former rate.

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Jones returned home to Round Valley Monday after a pleasant visit with relatives at Camp Independence.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz has been on the sick list for some time past. She had contracted a very severe cold and is threatened with pneumonia.

Chas. Summers, John Summers, Mrs. E. Summers and Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Webster came down from Bishop on Wednesday and made a number of land filings in the U. S. Land Office.

Very encouraging reports come in from the Modock country. Neil McLean came in last Monday for more oar sacks and reports that both the Modock and Minietta mines look better than ever before.

Henry Giles has been ailing for a long time past and in company with Tom Webb, he started for Los Angles last Tuesday by private conveyance. He will secure the best medical attendance and will doubtless soon be all right again.

Fred Holbert got back yesterday morning from a trip to Los Angeles. He says that the lower country is as dry as a powder house. This will cause great distress among farmers and stockmen in the big valleys. There is nothing like an irrigated country

H. E. WILKINSON,
Observer.

Complaint has been made that in the article on Inyo County, published in the Chronicle of December 29, 1865, no mention was made of the mining interests. The following paragraph, which was omitted by the Editor of the Chronicle, is explanatory. "That the vast mineral resources of have not been touched upon in this article is not through oversight, but that the subject could not be done adequate justice in the limited space and the matter is reserved for future publication." Mr. Mulholland has been gathering matter for some time past for an article on the mines of this County, which will soon be published.

Last night District Deputy Wells Barnes installed the following officers of Inyo Lodge No. 301, I. O. O. F: P. H. Mack, N. G; J. F. Beale, V. G; J. D. Blair, Secretary; E. Robinson, Treasurer: H. E. Wilkinson, Warden: J. R. Moffett, Conductor: John Alexander, I. G.

Modena Mention.

Mr. Partridge of Liberty District is painting the new shool house.

Rev. Smith of the Fort is doing carpenter work on Mr. Neil's new store.

There will be a social dance in the new store at Modena on the night of the 15th inst, to which every one is invited. Good music has been secured and a fine time is anticipated.

Miss Mabel Doss returned on Monday from Bishop, where she has been spending the holidays with friends, and is in rediness to resume school duties as soon as the building is completed.

J. W. Callaway is very busy these days taking men to the mountains in the Inyo range to cut wood. He is making extensive preperations for packing it out to where it can be got at with the wagons. NONPARIEL.

Coolgardie.

Rich new finds are being constantly reported from Coolgardie gold fields. Coolgardie, Australia, is an accessible point, reached by steamer to Fremantle, thence by rail to Southern Cross and team to destination. The trip to Australia on the fine steamersof the Oceanic Steamship Company via Honolulu, Samoa, and New Zealand is pleasure sailing the day long. This line tickets passengers to Cape Town, South Africa. Map of Coolgardie district and Pacific ports reached by the Oceanic Steamship Company is mailed free to any address by the O. S. S. ### FOREVER AND A DAY.

Urge me not, I pray.
All the air is golden;
Every thorny spray
In the sunlight blushes,
And my thoughts are holden
By the warbling thrushes.
Urge me not today.

Oh, when winds of May
Shake the boughs with laughter
Till they toss and sway,
Till they kiss and sever,
Speak not of hereafter,
Breathe not of forever—
Give me but today.
—J. K. Wetherill in Travelers' Record.

MY FIRST VOYAGE.

I sailed from the East India docks on Sept. 1, 1857, in the full rigged ship Duncan Dunbar, 1,374 tons, for Sydney. This vessel was named after her owner, who was so memorable a man in the history of British shipping that I cannot but pause a moment to refer to him.

To the eternal honor of Duncan Dunbar be it said that he began life as a rag and bottle merchant and worked with such energy and skill that he died possessed of more than two millions of English gold and the finest fleet of merchant ships at that time trading to all parts of the world from the river Thames. He was remarkable for his avarice, and many diverting stories of his cheeseparing struggles were current on board his own vessels.

Unlike the shipowner of today, who is with scarce an exception one of a company, Dunbar was the sole holder of his fleet. He died in 1861, and a portion of his great wealth went to Mr. Gellatly, a very kind, gentlemanly person, who had married the rich man's niece and for years managed his business down near the docks.

I went to sea as a midshipman in the merchant service. But this is a catchpenny term. Outside the royal navy there are no midshipmen. Consequently, as I did not ship as an apprentice, I must have signed articles as a boy simply.

I think the premium charged for the first voyage was 60 guineas. The outfit cost about 80. So that to send a lad on a voyage in those days was costlier to a parent than putting him to a first class school, where he would have got some education, perhaps learned good manners and probably acquired a taste for trade or one of the professions.

Certainly of the midshipman in the merchant service in my time not half remained at sea after the first voyage, and hardly a youth out of our numbers ever found a place upon the quarter deck, even in the laughably low capacity of fourth mate. Most of the captains and officers began as apprentices or rose from the forecastle.

I was 13 years and 7 months old when I went to sea and was undoubtedly too young for the vocation. I had no strength of body for the rough usage of the midshipman's berth. I was too tender to go aloft or to keep the deck through long, bitter nights.

I well remember the day and the hour when I stepped on board the Duncan Dunbar, in the East India docks. It was all wild confusion to my inexperienced gaze. Immediately after I had gained the ship she began to warp out of dock. Drunken seamen on the forecastle were shrieking and gesticulating to equally drunken people ashore. The waist and quarter deck were full of "lumpers," or "runners," elbowing crowds of weeping steerage passengers, shabbily dressed and clutching screaming infants.

Eight or nine midshipmen were running about the poop. I could merely hold on and look on. The confusion was complicated by noise. Every one seemed to be shouting, and nothing was at peace on board that frigate built ship, freighted to her chain plate bolts for the other side of the world, except her blue peter, signal of departure, blowing serenely at her foreroyal masthead.

No work seemed expected of me. It was required, however, that I should not get in the way. As I succeeded in getting very much in the way I was purposely knocked about, and when at last I was bowled down the poop ladder by a handsome rush of brass bound "third voyagers" I was glad to take refuge, with black eyes and streaming nose, in the midshipmen's berth.

This was, in that ship, a narrow compartment in the steerage under the quarter deck. You reached it by a manhole called the booby hatch, down which sank a perpendicular ladder. All was gloom and misery and evil smells when I went below for the first time, and for long afterward did this state of wretchedness last.

The emigrants were of the poorest and shabbiest. They were lodged in this part of the vessel, and they quarreled all the day, and their babies cried all night.

No one can imagine in this age of the steamship the sufferings which the emigrants underwent in the times of the sailing ship. They cooked their own food, and I have seen a crowd fighting like drunken seamen at the galley door for a place for their saucepans or kettles.

Not that the emigrant of today is a particularly well fed, well berthed man, but he is transported quickly. If his sufferings are keen, they are soon over. In my time they were uncommonly sharp, and they lasted four or five months.

The midshipman's berth was fitted with 12 bunks in double tiers. A narrow slip of table ran down the center. The edge of this table was like a saw from the action of the knives of the "young gentlemen," who used it for cutting up plug tobacco. Every bunk was to be filled this first voyage of mine, so that we were 12 midshipmen, worth some £700 for the voyage to the owner, irrespective of the value of our labor.

Moreover, each lad subscribed 10 guineas for what was termed mess money. So here was another £120 odd pounds to add to the cost of the hire of a dirty little sea parlor in the bowels of a ship stuffed with cargo, bulkheaded off in that part of her of which the emigrants made a Whitechapel alley.

A boy is young at 13½, and I felt myself to be a very little fellow indeed when I stood in the door of that midshipmen's berth, peering into the gloom with eyes brilliant with fear and astonishment. Was this to be my home until I returned to England? Was yonder rude shelf to replace the white, soft bed I had been used to? It was the middle of the day. Yet but for the flame of a sputtering lamp, dangling like a coffeepot from the center of the upper deck, it would have been difficult to see. In fact, this compartment was lighted by three scuttles, or portholes, only, round bullseyes of immensely thick glass, which were sunk low to the sea surface by the weight of the cargo, so that when our cabin was on the lee side these windows were always under water.

This is not an inviting picture I am drawing. It is the truth nevertheless. The apprentice nowadays goes to sea at much less cost and is far better used than was the heavily charged midshipman of my day. "Everything good comes when it's too late," murmurs poor, heartbroken little Jane Eyre when she rejects the coveted willow pattern plate. I have often wished that much of what is good on board ship nowadays had been invented in the rough fifties.

I should have been glad, for example, to be shipmates with double topsail yards. I hear of apprentices fed from the captain's table. I hear of apprentices instructed in navigation by the master and mates of the ship. Had it depended upon the captains I served under I never should have lifted a sextant to my eye.

I did not choose my bunk. It had been chosen for me. It was the most uncomfortable bunk in the berth. It was consistent with sea tradition, therefore, that the youngest and weakest should occupy it. On entering to look for it I found it an athwartships upper bunk. The lower bunk was to be occupied by a lad a little older than I, just a little stronger, and, like myself, a first voyager.

I knew my bed place by this token—to the bundle of bedding was attached a label bearing my name, "William Clark Russell, Midshipman, Ship Duncan Dunbar, E. I. D." But where was my chest—the chest that contained my clothes?

There were no chests in this berth, no place for such things—scarcely room, indeed, for a man's leg between the rows of bunks and the edge of the table. As I was going out a very tall, slim midshipman came in. His badge was dim, his buttons greenish. I, on the contrary, was most unhappily resplendent—a brand new sailor—and this old stager knew me at sight.

"What are you cruising about down here after?" said he.

"They gave me a black eye up stairs," said I.

"Up stairs, up stairs!" he roared. "There's no up stairs at sea, you guffy. Didn't you know that afore you shipped?"

"Didn't I know what?" said I innocently, for I did not understand him.

"Come here," said he. I approached him. He drew me close and plucked three hairs from my head. The pain was not very sharp, but this did not render the action the less brutally mean and unnecessary.

"If you don't pay attention," said he, "to what's said to you, you'll be bald before we're out of soundings. What are you mousing about down here for?"

"I am looking for my sea chest, sir," I answered, beginning to think this tall midshipman a great and important person aboard the ship.

Grasping me by the collar of my jacket and the seat of my trousers he raised me high and strode with me, t is pillared, into the 'tween decks.

"What's your name?" said he.

"Russell," said I.

"What a horrible name!" he exclaimed. "My name is Goole. How much better Goole sounds than Russell." He continued to hold me aloft. "What are your initials?" he asked.

"W. C. R."

"There you W. C. R., then!" said he. And he dumped me down as though I had been a sailor's bundle upon one of ten or a dozen sea chests, moored in all sorts of places in the steerage.

A midshipman's chest! It was called in my time "a hurrah's nest" because everything was always on top and nothing at hand. When I lift the lid of that chest in memory, I am visited by a faint, close smell of marine soap. I still possess the Bible I took with me, and the volume, like my memory, is haunted with that dim smell of marine soap in bars, by the impulse and influence of which I am able to see the ship, the gloomy 'tween decks, the midshipmen's berth, the patched figures of the emigrants as vividly as though I was aboard that vanished craft again.

I lift the lid of my sea chest, and what do I find? Some dozens of colored shirts, all so ungovernably stiff that I feel as unhappy as a turtle till they have been soaked; a great quantity of drill trousers, hard as the shirts, which had they been distended as the windsail is by the breeze, would have stood on end without a wearer.

In that chest were brass bound jackets and waistcoats, and black silk handkerchiefs for the making of streaming sailors' knots for the neck. In short, I was more ornamentally than usefully equipped, and before we were abreast of the Cape of Good Hope I should have been glad to exchange my finery for warm, homely pilot cloth and the plain underwear of the forecastle.

Mr. Goole, who looked as long to my youthful gaze as the mizzen royal yard, is the marine ogre of my first voyage, and in those distant memories he goes on pulling my hair, tweaking my nose, twisting my ears, punching my head, and in many other ways making himself a terror to me. Having dumped me down on my sea chest, he drove me up to the quarter deck, and thence on to the poop. What now followed I cannot clearly remember. I recollect being greatly scorned by the younger midshipmen, and pitied and protected by the third mate. But whether I pulled at a rope or did anything except get in the way of useful people while we were towing down to Gravesend I do not know.

It was a scene of enchantment, but not like something out of a fairy book, nor was it on the sweet side of magic. The liver colored river was crowded with craft of all sorts, stirring up chocolate colored froth as they drove aslant through the Reaches. Our yards towered to the dingy heavens of the isle of Dogs. They were massive as a frigate's with the furled gear, and the ship looked like a frigate with her wide spread of shroud, large tops and short royal mastheads.

We anchored at Gravesend for the night, and all through that night I lay in my clothes in my bed and slept as deeply as if I had been drugged. I was awakened by a terrifying commotion.

"Tumble up—out you come! All hands unmoor ship!" The third mate stood in the door roaring out these unintelligible syllables. Then, observing that I did not make haste to jump up, the long legged ogre, Goole, dragged me out of my bed and ran me capless and bootless to the deck.

It was raining hard—a dark, sulky, sallow Thames morning. The crew were setting the topsails and bellowing like terrified men at the halyards. The captain, looking over the break of the poop, seeing me bareheaded and gaping up at the sails, told me to run below and put on my boots, cap and oilskins. I discovered my oilskins—after searching all about the steerage—under my mattress, but the leggings stuck to each other like cold wax, and I flung them down.

I put on the waterproof coat and returned on deck smelling like an oil can, but I do not think I did more, or was asked to do more than stare about me. The ship was again in tow of the tug. She carried single topsails, and those three lofty breasts rose white as snow to the crosstrees.

The rain sometimes drove with us, and sometimes it sheered aslant. It was a weeping picture. Unspeakably melancholy did the gray waters of the Thames bank sides and flats appear in that drenched and leaden atmosphere. By and by the third mate, stepping up to me, said kindly, "What's your name?"

"William Clark Russell, sir."

"I am not a court of justice," said he, laughing. "I don't administer oaths. Russell, my sonny, come along down to breakfast," and with that the kindly creature—he was a shaggy Orkney islander, a grand, active young seaman of 20—gripping me with the hand of a bear, conveyed me below into the midshipmen's berth.

He took the head of the table. The "young gentlemen" sat upon the edges of their bunks on either side. An empty pickle case was passed along, and, top ended, served me for a seat.

A boy waited upon us. They called him the midshipmen's servant. He had been in a man-of-war and was the smartest little sailor lad I can recollect. He danced the hornpipe charmingly, was liberally tattooed over the arms and chest, walked with the flowing and knowing roll of the brine seasoned tar, and was, I think, about 15 years old.

He put a great dish of huge brown steaks upon the table, and then brought pots of coffee, and loaves of bread, and salt butter, and we fell to amid a great noise of talk and clanking of cheap cutlery upon tin plates. I began to feel that I was seeing life and going to be a man.

But all at once, the river having by this time opened into wide water, with the weight of the swell of the still distant North sea beating like a delicate pulse in it, the ship slightly pitched. I dropped my knife and fork and turned pale.

She pitched again, and this time I pitched with her amid the mingled laughter and wrath of the rest of the young gentlemen at breakfast. Fortunately there were three other "first voyagers," all of whom were quickly "taken worse."—W. Clark Russell in Youth's Companion.

Mark Twain on Shipboard.

Mark Twain looks upon a journey across the ocean much as another man might look upon crossing the East river on a ferryboat. The humorist enjoys the ocean and the life of idleness which is enforces on one. He does not know what it is to be sick, and after his own fashion he has a good time. This "fashion" is more pleasing to himself than to any one who happens to share his stateroom, as did a friend of mine recently. This friend told me that he never crossed the ocean with a man who stuck closer to his stateroom.

When the genial Mark awakens, usually about 7 o'clock, he reaches out for his pipe and book and begins to smoke and read. He keeps this up until about 11 in the morning, when he calls for his morning coffee, which he takes while in his berth. Then he smokes and reads again until about 1, when he begins to write. At 5 he stops long enough to dress, take a turn around the deck, and goes to the saloon for his dinner. This is the only time of the day when the passengers see him. After dinner he takes a stroll on the deck, goes back to his stateroom, undresses and begins to read and smoke once more, which he keeps up steadily until far into the night.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Webster's Wit.

Most men of weight dislike the frail gilt and satin chairs which accidentally fall to their lot in a crowded drawing room. They were in use in Mr. Webster's time. At an evening reception given to some western lawyers, soon after the accession of President Tyler and the dissolution of President Harrison's cabinet, Mr. Stanberry, late attorney general, was accompanied by his bashful friend, Mr. Leonard, who immediately retired to a corner and selected this gilded trifle as a resting place. In order to withdraw still farther from notice, he tilted the frail structure backward. Down it went, smashed into a dozen pieces, and Leonard, the embarrassed, was Leonard the observed by all.

Mr. Webster immediately rushed to the rescue of his unfortunate guest and raised him from the floor with the reassuring remark, "Why, my dear Mr. Leonard, you should have remembered that no cabinet work would hold together here."

Bad For the Teeth.

The practice of taking hot and ice cold drinks, especially when alternated at short intervals, as when hot coffee or tea and ice water are taken at meals, the careless use of the toothpick, which often irritates and wounds the gums and causes them to recede, the too free use of artificial sweets and the use of tobacco are all causes for the decay of the teeth. The most potent cause, however, says an authority, is the lack of natural exercise of chewing, which will bring to them a sufficient blood supply to keep them solid and sound.—New York Telegram.

THE AMERICAN INDIAN.

There are few instances of full blooded Indians entering the learned professions.

The skin of the Indian is thinner than that of either the white or the negro and more easily torn.

Disease, misfortune and death were generally, according to Indian theology, attributed to the influence of evil spirits.

There is a mound on the banks of Brush creek, Adams county, O., which represents a serpent in the act of swallowing an egg.

Coronado, in 1540, found the pueblos of New Mexico densely populated, and other explorers noted the presence of the cliff dwellers in Colorado and elsewhere.

Like all other savage peoples, the Indians had very little idea of laying up for the future. They lived from hand to mouth, rarely making adequate provision, even for the winter.

It is a singular fact that most of the American tribes retain traditions of their coming to America from some other country. Most of their traditions pointed toward the northwest as the place whence they migrated.

The great temple in the City of Mexico was a stone structure of five stages, or stories, 300 feet square at the base and 120 high. There were eight similar structures of almost equal size in the city, and nearly 2,000 much smaller.

The state of the monuments in the Mississippi valley indicates that there must have been a dense population, depending largely on agriculture and having comparatively civilized institutions and government, at the time when the greatest mounds were built.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

STAGE GLINTS.

It is rumored that Maud Adams is to marry Richard Harding Davis.

John Drew is booked for the Vaudeville theater, London, for May 12, 1896, in "A Love Knot."

Little Mabel Taliaferro, child actress, has been engaged to play Rosetta in the "A Ride For Life" company.

"The Maid of Erin" is the title of a comic opera being written by Stanislaus Stange and Julian Edwards for W. A. Brady.

Jessie West, formerly with "Shaft No. 10," was especially engaged for the soubrette part in "An American Hero."

When William Gillette's new play, "Secret Service," is produced in London next winter, it will have a cast of American actors.

"The White Rat," the new melodrama by R. N. Stephens, will have its first production in August, at the National theater, in Philadelphia.

The programmes of several of the London theaters contain notices positively prohibiting the wearing of hats by women occupying the high priced seats.

Annie Ward Tiffany, who has been starring in "Lady Blarney," goes with the "A Fatted Calf" company next season to play the part of Mrs. McCann.

Forbes Robertson commences his season at the Lyceum theater, London, Sept. 14, with "Romeo and Juliet." Mrs. Patrick Campbell will be the Juliet.

William F. Owen, who has retired from Augustin Daly's company, will be a member of Julia Marlowe-Taber's company next season. He will play Falstaff in the production of "Henry IV."

THE FASHION PLATE.

To be quite fashionable all gloves must fit loosely.

Basket woven duck is in great demand for fancy vests.

Large, full mutton leg sleeves of glace chine silk are greatly favored.

Rarely does one see a fancy bodice made entirely of fabric matching the skirt.

Skirts continue to be but little trimmed, and the point of elaborate decoration is still the waist.

Lightweight black cheviots are very popular fabrics for stylish traveling and shopping costumes.

Collars continue to be decorated at the sides and set far back, or in the center of the back, with ribbon rosettes or loops.

Plaid, striped and flowered ribbons are one of the conspicuous fads of fashion and are the main feature of many thin gowns.

Gauze sleeves will be worn so wide and so long that, although gathered in above the elbow, they fall half way down the arm.

Striped crepons are very fashionable. Many of the silk and satin crepons show flowered grounds and lace stripes. These goods are made up over taffeta silk.

Black and white is more fashionable than it has ever been before. Black and white lightweight silks, very narrowly striped, are among the season's most popular fabrics.

This is a season of box plaits. They are often made of passementerie and of rows of overlapping ribbon, which begin on the shoulder, cross the bust diagonally and end at the waist line.—Chicago Record.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

Command is anxiety; obedience, ease.—Paley.

Patience is the key of content.—Mohammed.

After victory strap the helmet tighter.—Japanese.

Opinion is a medium between knowledge and ignorance.—Plato.

Minds which never rest are subject to many digressions.—Joubert.

A cheerful face is nearly as good for an invalid as healthy weather.—Franklin.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND.

The avocations of men go on just the same in winter as in summer, and those who labor hard with hands, body and muscles know this full well. The sports also are just as festive and are attended with many accidents. The chances of accident are about the same to all, but to the laboring man a mishap means very much. For instance, a sprain may cripple badly and mean loss of time, place and money were it not that we all know how readily St. Jacobs Oil will cure a sprain, and prevent all these misgivings. So let us enjoy ourselves without fear.

China has given us 106,000 men, mostly laundrymen.

THE GREAT LABOR REQUIRED TO FEED THE MULTITUDE.

The Baker's Task a Hard One—He Soon Breaks Down and Has to Desert His Occupation—A Well-known Baker Gives a Reporter an Insight of the Business.

From the Examiner, San Francisco, Cal.

In speaking of the physical endurance which is required of bakers as a class, Mr. Louis Coppola, of 969 Harvard Street, San Francisco took occasion to say that many of them break down under the severe strain of their work. The most vital point of endurance is the back. The men have to bend over the long troughs in which the dough is mixed. The work is comparatively light until the dough begins to thicken, but then it becomes a continuous process of lifting and throwing the heavy mass in a trough containing three hundred or four hundred pounds of dough. It necessitates the employment of almost herculean strength to properly mix the dough.

"I gave way under the strain of such work," said Mr. Coppola.

"It affected my kidneys, just as it does those of many others who follow the trade. I began to experience pains in the small of my back. At first they were periodical, but they afterwards became more frequent and finally it became so that I suffered from them not only while I was working but when I was at leisure. They would sieze upon me while I slept and cause me hours of painful wakefulness. I soon saw that I was being unfitted for my work, so I began taking medicine for the relief of the complaint. It was all to no avail, however, until I purchased a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I did not take the pills in the confidence that they would in any way relieve me of my suffering, but I bought them simply to see if the many reports of their marvelous power were true. I was soon convinced, for before I had taken very many of them the pains in the region of my kidneys began to be lessened, and before I had taken a full box I had been entirely relieved. I knew no more wakeful nights, no more painful exertions while at work. In fact, I was a new man, and I owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"My sister, Mrs A. Duncan, has been a sufferer from female weaknesses for some time. She has gone about in a sort of moping, listless way, with no energy for any kind of exertion. When she saw the great good which had been done me by Williams' Pills she determined to take some herself. The result has been very favorable. She has gained strength, is as lively as a young girl, and and in fact says she feels as though she were ten years younger than she really is."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or directly by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

True Sympathy.

The railway world witnesses daily so many piteous partings that weeping travelers seldom attract official notice, but Mr. G. A. Sala records an exceptional instance. It was at the time of our civil war, and he was about departing for America, as correspondent of a great London daily.

"My wife was bitterly opposed to my going to America at all, and the idea of my traveling in a country convulsed by war so preyed upon her mind that she became positively ill. Still she insisted on coming to the railway terminus with me, and a party of friends were on the platform to give us a parting cheer.

"It was a desperate moment. I had parted from all that was dear to me, and had flung myself in a very limp and boneless manner in a corner of the carriage of the mail. I glared feebly at the burly, bearded guard who thrust his head into the window. He leaned toward me, and in a voice hoarse with sympathy whispered:

"'Excuse me, sir, but you have another three-quarters of a minute before the train starts, and you can get out and give the lady another hug.'"

Kate Douglas Wiggin-Riggs.

The recent marriage of Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin and Mr. George Riggs inspires a writer in the London Queen to the following graceful tribute which will be appreciated by Mrs. Riggs' many American friends: "Most people in London literary society will remember Mrs. Wiggin-Riggs—a tall, beautiful, supremely elegant woman, who looked as if the late Mr. Worth gave his entire attention to dressing her—a woman whose hair was like burnished gold, and whose beauty was at once spiritual and vivacious. I never heard an author give readings from his or her books with as much spirit as Mrs. Wiggin-Riggs. She used to give extracts from her 'Timothy's Quest,' than which no recently published work is fuller of dry New England humor, and from her 'Bird's Christmas Carol,' a book for big and little children, worthy of comparison with Juliana Horatia Ewing."

A MODERN HERO.

His limbs are fixed in rigid pain,
As though in iron bands;
He cannot shift his trodden feet;
He cannot use his hands.

He dares not turn his throbbing head
Or stiffened neck. For why?
The handle of a walking stick
Would jab him in the eye.

The lagging minutes lengthen out
In famine's deadly hold.
He sits and longs, like Tantalus,
His dinner growing cold.

No hooded, grim inquisitor
Inflicts his long drawn pain.
He pays a price to suffer it,
Disdaining to complain.

Oh, sing of heroes dead in war,
But here I pledge in wine
The third class passenger who rides
On a suburban line!
—Fred B. Wells in Home and Country.

HYPNOTIZED.

"There isn't anybody living who can hypnotize me."

"Don't be too sure, Leonora," said her husband. "You cannot afford to run a tilt against science."

"But I deny that it is science. What has ever been proved by hypnotism? It is foolish to argue about it, for I will not even admit that there is such a thing. The shrewd people who go about the country giving exhibitions of their power are always in collusion with some one in the audience—you know that yourself, Ned."

"Nothing of the kind," retorted Ned, as Mrs. Darl called her husband. "It is a science that is yet in its infancy, and there are only a few individuals who have the hypnotic power and are able to throw less positive subjects into a trance. But I have seen it done, and it is wonderful—wonderful."

"What did you see?"

"I saw a young man climb walls like a cat, drink milk out of a saucer, catch a mouse, and then wash his face and hands as a cat does. And when he came out of the trance he had no idea that he had done any of these things or that he had even lost consciousness."

"Hum!" said Mrs. Darl incredulously, "I don't believe a word of it. If he did all that you said he did, he was simply a conspirator. And what good can such a faculty bring to science, I should like to know? Where is the scientific value in acting like a cat or a monkey?"

"Why, don't you see, dear, it is the verification of a theory?"

"No, I do not see. And I am not sure that I would believe it if I did see it. The whole stock in trade of these hypnotizers is the power of producing an illusion. I defy any of them to hypnotize me."

"I had intended asking you to go with me to the exhibition tonight."

"And be transmogrified into a cat? No, indeed! If I make a sacrifice of myself in the cause of science, it must be for something worth while. You have yet to convince me, Ned, that what you call the hypnotic sleep is not assumed to help carry out the plan of the hypnotizer or as a means of creating a sensation. There is no one living who could by a few ridiculous passes, a stare or pressure of my thumbs make me do anything I did not choose to do."

"But you acknowledge, do you not, that a strong will can control a weak one?"

"Yes, and always could, but that is as old as the days of Adam, who was evidently in subjection to Eve. I suppose some one will say that deep sleep which overtook our first father when his rib was taken from him was hypnotic. It would be just about as sensible."

"I have an idea," said Mr. Darl suddenly. "Suppose, since Mohammed won't go to the mountain, that the mountain comes to Mohammed. The hypnotist can come here after the entertainment, and we will invite a few neighbors in, and he can give an exhibition of his powers. How does that idea strike you?"

"Favorably, Ned. There are the Rusts, and the Pebbles and Dr. Smithly and his wife, and Cousin Fanny and her husband. You can let them know, and I will order refreshments, and we will have an evening of hypnotism. It will begin late, but we can find other amusement until your hypnotic operator comes."

Mrs. Darl had everything arranged—her house in beautiful order and herself gorgeous in a dress of ruby velvet, which was far too fine for the occasion, but was worn as a piece de resistance, she having read that velvet resisted hypnotic influence.

The neighbors and relatives came, a merry company, and the time passed in an animated discussion upon the power of hypnotism, one friend going so far in research as to visit the library and look up that wonderful story, the "House of Seven Gables," and read aloud to attentive listeners a passage from the weird history of Alice Pyncheon.

"He spoke, and Alice responded with a soft, subdued inward acquiescence and a bending of her form toward him, like the flame of a torch when it indicates a gentle draft of air. He beckoned with his hand, and rising from her chair the proud Alice approached him. He waved her back, and retreating Alice sunk again into her seat.

"'She is mine,' said Matthew Maule. 'Mine by the right of the strongest spirit.'

"'Oh, that was mesmerism,' said Mrs. Darl as the reading ceased.

"And what is mesmerism?" asked one of the company. "I think that it is as unexplainable as hypnotism, if it is not the same thing. Oh, here they are now! Let us hold on to our chairs, or we may be spirited away to China. I, for one, am afraid."

"I am not," said the queenly hostess as she swept forward in velvet and diamonds to meet her husband and his guest.

A pale, composed looking man accompanied Mr. Darl, and he did not seem surprised by the elegance of his hostess or flushed by the critical gaze of the company.

After the introductions were made and conversation became general, Mrs. Darl slipped into the hall and beckoned to her husband, who immediately joined her. Then she whispered in his ear:

"If—if—by any possibility he should be able to hypnotize me, you will not let him make me do anything ridiculous?"

"My dear Leona, how can you imagine such a possibility? But if you have any fear"—

"Fear!" echoed his wife scornfully in a stage whisper. "You will see that he cannot make the slightest impression on me." And she went back to the parlor and found one of her guests climbing the piano to escape an imaginary bear that was pursuing him. A few passes and he was restored to his normal condition, looking very foolish.

There were some amusing and some perplexing exhibitions of the professor's power, then the company followed host and hostess to the dining room, where a generous spread awaited them. Mrs. Darl was rather silent. Her test would be the next one, and she watched the wiry hands of the young professor as if his secret lay in them. But they were harmlessly busy with the sandwiches. His face was quite noncommittal too. What was the power he held of reducing the will to a mere blank? She would soon know.

Back in the parlor Mrs. Darl seated herself under the brilliant chandelier.

"Not there," said the professor, but she did not intend to yield to any command of his and said quietly:

"I prefer to sit here."

"Then I cannot hypnotize you."

"Oh, you acknowledge that it is only under certain conditions that this great power can be displayed?"

"Certainly, there are conditions that must be complied with. I am positive, and you are negative, but you are a very difficult subject because you are resisting me with all your might."

Mrs. Darl looked reproachfully at her husband and said in the dumb alphabet of the married, "You have told him."

He flashed back in the same language, "I have not," and she moved in accordance with the wish of the professor and sat with her back to the light. Some of the company were removed to remote parts of the room, but a few, including Mr. Darl, stood near.

"Look into my eyes," said the professor. "Permit me." And he took her hands and pressed the thumbs gently.

"It is like being in a dentist's chair," said Mrs. Darl, with a little forced laugh. Then she attempted to rise, struggling slightly, but continued to look into the eyes of the hypnotizer until in the place of two eyes she saw 20. Then she asserted her will and shook herself free.

"I—told—you—I—could—not be—hypnotized," she said. Her voice sounded strange and far away. "How queer I feel! Staring so long has made me dizzy."

"Drink this," said Mr. Darl, giving his wife a glass of water.

She drank it, then rose to her feet and said she felt as well as ever.

"Where is the professor?" she asked. "I expect he has lost faith in his science."

"He was here a moment ago," said her cousin Fanny anxiously. "He thought he had succeeded in hypnotizing you, Leona. Were you not unconscious?"

"Not for one moment," said Mrs. Darl triumphantly. "He held my thumbs until they were numb—why!—where!—Ned!"

"What is it, Leona?" he asked in surprise at her peculiar tone.

"Where are my diamonds?"

There was a startled exclamation from every one present. Mrs. Darl stood there bereft of every jewel she possessed. Not a single one of her gems which had flashed on her fingers, at her throat, in her ears, was now visible. Dazed, she held up her ringless hands and said:

"Is this a joke? What does it mean? Where are my diamonds?"

"Where is the professor?"

"Search the house!"

"Send for the police!"

But the professor had left for parts unknown, and with him went Mrs. Darl's diamonds, and neither the police nor the Darls ever saw or heard of them or him again. But one thing was in his favor. Not only had he successfully hypnotized Mrs. Darl, but, as Mr. Darl admitted, he must have hypnotized the whole company in order to bring his hypnotic scheme to such a climax.

And Mrs. Darl is at last a convert to both the theory and practice of the occult science and a firm believer in the power of the hypnotic will.—Mrs. M. L. Rayne in Free Press.

A Daring Forgery.

A neat forgery was recently committed by a Parisian criminal, one Altmayer, which in its adroitness and audacity was worthy of "Jim the Penman" himself.

The accused had lately had several hearings at the Palais de Justice before M. Villiers, juge d'instruction. Several times during these hearings M. Villiers was summoned from the room for a few minutes at a time.

During one of these absences the culprit contrived to get possession of a sheet of paper and an envelope with official printed heading, and also to affix the official seal. Then he drew up at his leisure a document ordering his own immediate release, counterfeiting with rare skill the judge's signature.

On quitting the court one day he handed the letter thus prepared to the sentinel stationed in the corridor and remarked in an offhand manner, "The judge wants you to carry this letter immediately to the director of the Mazas prison." The soldier, suspecting nothing, took the letter and accompanied the prisoner to Mazas. A few minutes later Altmayer was summoned to the director's office and was informed that he was a free man.

With an outburst of simulated joy and surprise he at once took his departure, and as the fraud was not discovered until the following day he had plenty of time to get beyond the reach of the clutches of French justice.

A SUBJECT RACE.

They knew not whence the tyrant came;
They did not even know his name.
Yet he compelled them one and all
To bow in bondage to his thrall,
And from their lips allegiance wrung,
Although a stranger to their tongue.

Whilst he was wrapped in royal state
Their hours of toil were long and late.
No moment could they call their own
Within the precincts of the throne,
And when they dreamed their work was o'er
He only made them slave the more.

Although the conquering king was he
Of people who had once been free,
No word of praise or promise fell
From him his subjects served so well,
And none of those who crowned him lord
Received a shadow of reward.

Obedience to his behest
Destroyed their peace, disturbed their rest.
Yet when his drowsy eyes grew dim
No mortal dared to waken him.
They stole about with stealthy tread—
"The baby is asleep," they said.

THE MILK WHITE DOE

The sound was so faint that only the ears of the skilled huntsman might hear it.

It came from hundreds of tiny hoofs, muffled by the grass in the mountain park.

"Antelope!"

Together we lay face downward, I and my Indian guide, with our long rifles at easy rest, and awaited the coming of the band. It dashed over a hogsback and into full view, a wildly leaping, struggling, undulating mass of reddish brown, white tufted bodies stretched to the fullest speed.

Nervous? Yes, for in a moment more the band would pass us within easy range.

We lay with forefingers on the triggers as the timid animals, wild with fear, skimmed along as if wafted by the spirit of the wind. Now they are directly opposite. We will never have such another shot.

Onward they dash and pass so closely by that it seems we can hear their heartbeats. Their great, liquid eyes are wild with terror.

Another moment and the herd has swept by us; only the hindmost are in view. Now they are out of hearing and presently are lost to sight.

Absolute silence, save for the rustle of the brown grass as the cooling autumn wind stirs it.

Not a shot was fired. My finger was upon the trigger, my arm certain, but I lacked the power even for the gentle pressure necessary to send a bullet straight into the herd. I was under a spell.

I looked at Pablo. His dark face seemed almost pale; his eyes betrayed excitement, not the excitement of anger or fear, but of a tender sympathy.

The same power that had staid my finger when it would have pressed the trigger had a like effect upon him.

"Senor," he said, "it is the milk white doe that none may slay."

It was overpowering curiosity that had rendered my forefinger inflexible, for at the head of the band was the most beautiful animal I had ever seen—a milk white doe. She seemed fleeter, more timid and of more graceful contour than any of the herd. She was the perfection of animal grace and beauty. I fancied I heard a soft, sad moan as she passed before the muzzle of my rifle. I was lost briefly in pathetic contemplation, and the herd was gone.

"Come, Pablo, it is almost dusk, but we must follow. Come, stir yourself, you unenthusiastic son of Montezuma, and let us be gone."

"Senor," said Pablo, in his calm and imperturbable manner, yet with a solemn impressiveness, "it is death to all who follow the milk white doe."

"Nonsense; I must have her. Let us follow quick."

"Have patience, senor, and tonight when we smoke by the campfire I will tell you the legend of the milk white doe."

And this is the legend he told me:

Before the white man knew there was a western continent, before the Spaniards came, even before the reign of the ancient Quetzalcoatl, lord of the Seven Caves of Navatlaques and king of the Seven Nations, out of which arose the splendor of the Montezuman empire, the powerful tribes lived in the north. They were as the sands of the shore washed by the great ocean of the rising sun, and the numbers of their arrows were greater than the twigs in the forest.

Their queen was Maxtella.

Her skin was as white as the snow on yonder mountain peak, her lips were as scarlet as the flaming loco blossom, her eyes were as blue as the chalchuites in the Minas de las Perdidas, and from their liquid depths beamed truth and purity of soul.

She was a virgin queen. Her courtiers wooed her in vain. The richest of them all laid his wealth of chalchuites and beautiful shells at her feet. The mightiest hunter brought her trophies of the chase. To all she spoke words of wisdom and beauty, but her love was for no one man; it was for all her people. Her virtue and her beauty were the marvels of those days.

Her counselors were wise beyond their generation. Many things they knew that were unknown to the subjects of Queen Maxtella. They knew of the eastern ocean, of a great country beyond to which their ancestors had gone years before.

The northern hordes were at peace. So powerful were they that the tribes in the south did not dare to make war with them, nor would the queen suffer her subjects to make war upon those weaker hordes who dwelt in rocks and caves, high up in the cliffs that bordered on the green canyons. There was a vassal chief, Azul, of lowly birth and evil ways. He saw the beautiful Maxtella, and the sight of her touched his black heart. He loved Maxtella not for her virtue nor her wisdom. He loved her that he might rule the land, and that from his blood and hers might come a race of savage kings, and that the northern hordes might make war upon the tribes of the south and despoil them of their treasure.

Azul knew the black magic art. He brought his richest treasure to Maxtella's court. He used his black art that he might appear pleasing in her sight. His arms and throat were bare. On his head was a snowy white helmet, and his dress was of green feathers. His breastplate of feather work gleamed like jewels when the sun shone upon it. Tall and straight was this vassal chief and mighty was his stride. Great blue and blood red stones shone in the middle of his sword.

But the counselors were wise men. They could see his black heart and read his evil mind, and they spurned him with scorn. They would have driven him from the court. The vassal chief held in his hand a wand, sharp pointed like a knife, by which he worked his magic art.

When the queen appeared, he looked at her and turned pale. Azul's eyes pierced her, but his magic was not strong enough to make her love him. Until then she knew not fear, but now the evil spell was upon her. All of Azul's power was exerted to subdue her gentle heart.

When she went to walk, a wolf sprang up in her path, sharp stones cut through the deerskin and wounded her feet.

Near by was a spring of healing water, but when Maxtella went to drink of it a foul odor of poisonous gases arose.

She sought her couch, but Azul had driven sleep away. When she was alone, the black hearted vassal chief would suddenly appear and with thongs of the deer would beat her white body until his savage lashes drew drops of blood.

All things could he make Maxtella do but love him. False words she spoke to her counselors and did unholy deeds that made her courtiers bow their heads in shame. No more was Maxtella just or merciful. Cruelty, pitiless cruelty, turned her love of her subjects to hate.

Of her attendants who remained faithful none was more so than a little page, a boy of not more than a score of years. These two sat one eve within the palace. The dusky shadows were gathering without, but the night could only bring added wretchedness to Maxtella. The boy sang to her, and as his song died away a black shape entered the room. It was Azul.

"Thy song is sad," he said to the page. "Why do you not weep, Maxtella?"

The rivers of Maxtella's eyes were dried up.

"Now I will teach you how to weep," and he struck her with his cruel thong.

Maxtella turned upon him her timid, pleading eyes. With a mighty bound the youth leaped toward the chief and seized the magic wand. Its possession gave him the strength of many men. He struck the wretch a blow and pinned him to the floor. Azul writhed in pain, and the blood dyed his dress of feathers crimson. None but a wizard might ever loose him. With the blow the spell he had wrought on Maxtella was broken, and all her gentleness and purity returned. It was this that caused her to pity the bleeding wretch, squirming in agony, yet furious with rage. She reached down her delicate hand to withdraw the wand if it were possible, when Azul seized her by the arm and buried his sharp, gleaming teeth into the hand extended in mercy.

Maxtella, unable to release herself, shrieked in pain, for the bite of the sorcerer was as deadly as the poison of the snake with the castanets in his tail.

"Now is thy blood mingled with mine," hissed Azul, "and of thy own free will! Now are we one forever. By my living hate and the mingling of our blood I have supremest power over thee. Coward thou hast ever been; coward thou shalt ever be. Thy spirit shall pass from thee in the form of the creature thou most resemblest—a doe, timid of heart, fleet of foot and spotlessly white. None may slay thee, yet thou wilt ever long for the dart that would release the spell. Thy speed shall shame the fleetest of the herd, and thy matchless beauty shall ever lure the hunter to his death."

And with these words a milk white doe darted from the palace walls, trembling with fright. It hides in brakes and canyons and flees when no hunter is nigh.

Hundreds have seen it, and many have been lured to pursue it. The fallen rocks from canyon walls hide the course of many a hunter who sought to slay the milk white doe. None has ever returned to tell the story of those chases. And those who escaped the canyon's dangers—their bones lie bleaching in eternal snow.—Chicago Times-Herald.

From Minerals, Vegetables.

It has long been a dream of the evolutionist that the vegetable kingdom has evolved from the mineral, as he believes that the animal has evolved from the vegetable, and it may be that in the fairy figures on our window panes we are witnessing, as it were, the efforts of nature to effect this transformation. We are taught that the earth was once too hot to support the life of plants, but that after the surface had cooled, trees, shrubs and mosses sprang up. Whence did they come?

A frosted window pane shows us the strange phenomenon of inorganic matter assuming the shapes of ferns and leaves and fronds, and may perhaps represent to our eyes in miniature a process which went on on a large scale during the prevegetable era of our earth's history. This idea is as old as the Jewish Cabala, where we read, "The breath became a stone, the stone a plant, the plant an animal, the animal a man, the man a spirit, the spirit a god."—London Spectator.

The wise are instructed by reason, ordinary minds by experience, the stupid by necessity and brutes by instinct.—Cicero.

Some natures are like pens—they may be driven; but others are like pencils, which are better when they are lead.

THE AMERICAN INDIAN.

Many dictionaries of the Indian tongues were made by the early French and Spanish monks.

The Indians of the gulf coast made a sort of beer, while in Mexico the pulque or fermented sap of the maguey was used.

The Peruvian method of recording events was a system of knotted cords. It is, however, claimed by some that these were merely used as helps to the memory.

The early explorers found the Indians engaged in constructing defensive works, as mounds, ditches and embankments, the remains of which, at a later day, were attributed to prehistoric races.

The Indian custom of scalping a slain enemy is one common to many nations in an early state of development. It was practiced by the Scythians and other barbarous nations of Europe in ancient times.

Indian agriculture was confined to a few plants, all of very easy cultivation and mostly indigenous to the soil. Indian corn, squashes, beans, plantains, cassava, tobacco and two or three others exhaust the list.

The bow and arrow, darts and spears, a sort of flint sword, the lasso, the blowpipe, the club and stone balls attached to ropes formed the Indian arsenal of weapons, while shields and occasional coats of mail made of rawhide were the main defense.

The acuteness of the wild Indians in following a trail was almost miraculous. After following it for a few miles they were generally able to tell exactly how many persons were of the party, together with numerous personal peculiarities of the individuals composing it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE FASHION PLATE.

A fetching cotton fabric showing fancy stripes on dark and light blue grounds is known as marine twill.

Among silks taffeta has the preference, as it is of light weave and is produced in a great variety of effects.

All bouffant effects should be left entirely to the thin woman, who needs them and can wear them with good results.

Tall women may wear long capes with good results, but those who are short or of medium height should wear them much shorter.

Crape ribbons are made with satin edges that often contrast in hue with crape, which is very soft and is particularly effective in stock collars.

Fine laces will be used for trimming gowns of india muslin. It is a novel decree of fashion that coarse laces are most suitable for use on brocaded taffetas and similar fabrics.

The fancy pompadour silks are made up into exceedingly dainty parasols. These come in pink, blue, yellow and white grounds, with chine printed garlands strewn over the surface.

Some of the new styles are hideous, one in particular with a deep collar and very wide revers crossing the front in surplice fashion. These revers are trimmed with enormous rosettes, large enough for sauce plates.

Skirts are showing more trimming with every new importation. One skirt has two fluted ruffles arranged in deep scallops, the points of the scallops finished with rosette bows. Another skirt has a 10 inch, flat, side plaited ruffle.

STAGE GLINTS.

The great American play appears to be about 20 years overdue. Will it ever come?

Fritz Williams' suggested starring tour has evidently and sensibly been abandoned.

Summer stock companies have done better this season than at any time during the decade.

New York managers profess to be anxious to get hold of reasonably good plays by Americans.

H. J. Leslie may enter the field of comic opera production with a brand new star next season.

James O'Neill declares that he can only use plays which admit of his being on the stage nearly all the time.

Julia Arthur should at last be happy. She has been interviewed and pictured by one of the leading London weeklies.

George Monroe is to have a new comedy next season. He will try to be a man in one act, a woman in the others and a success in all.

Alice Pierce, the talented child actress, and her mother, May Pierce, will both be in the cast of Hoyt's new satire, "A Satisfied Woman."

Marie Millard's voice has been considerably praised by the New York critics, who say that she cannot act. She is the prima donna of "The Sphinx."

There is no truth in the rumor that Thomas W. Keene has retired from the stage. He will continue his nightly seances with Shakespeare next season.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

The sure way to miss success is to miss the opportunity.—Chasles.

It is the penalty of fame that a man must ever keep rising.—Chapin.

There are some people who give with the air of refusal.—Queen Christina.

I have great hope of a wicked man; slender hope of a mean one.—Beecher.

Fiction is a potent agent for good—in the hands of the good.—Mme. Necker.

The pursuit even of the best things ought to be calm and tranquil.—Cicero.

The shortest way to do many things is to do only one thing at once.—Smiles.

He shall be immortal who liveth till he be stoned by one without fault.—Fuller.

Foster the beautiful, and every hour thou callest new flowers to birth.—Schiller.

Cremation on the Battlefield.

The other day the Emperor William, in view of the carnage inseparable from latter day warfare, took counsel with the medical staff of the German war office as to whether or to what extent cremation might not be utilized for the disincumbering of battlefields after such sanguinary combats as those, for example, around Metz in the campaign of 1870. The subject is full of difficulty, and even if cremation be eventually put in practice for such an end it must, without question, call into operation a much larger, a much more variously disciplined medico-military personnel than hitherto. The electric light, after darkness has set in, may be trusted to aid in distinguishing the dying from the dead, but expert examination will be needed before such an irrevocable process as that of the crematorium is applied to bodies in which the vital spark, not wholly extinguished, may yet have a chance of being fanned into flame. This examination will not be called for in the case of those who are either killed outright or whose condition is such that only a few minutes can intervene before rigor mortis begins to declare itself. It may be spared also in those cases where after operation the resources of the field ambulance have failed to re-enforce the powers of life. But from the two sides of the battlefield—from the front and from the rear—the crematorium will never be without food, all too abundant, if the provisions of the Emperor William as to the "butcher's bill" of the next great European war are to be realized.—London Lancet.

Chicago Has a New Bug.

There is a new bug in town. He flies high and goes about seeking whom he may devour. Naturalists have not yet succeeded in finding a name for him, but he is said to belong to the species electric-lightibus terroribus, otherwise known as the "fly by night terror." For there is no doubt that the animal is a terror. There have been electric light bugs ever since that style of illumination was introduced, but this particular bug seems to be new to Chicago. In color he is a dirty brown. He is about two inches in length, with three pairs of legs. These bugs are numerously jointed and are armed at the extremities with two sharp claws. The two front pinchers, or grippers, are especially strong and keen, and they fasten into any soft object with a most tenacious grasp. If this object happens to be some person's skin, the consequences are often exceedingly unpleasant, for the insect has a venomous sting and seldom fails to raise a blister. He is about twice the size of a June bug, but ten times more wicked. So far the bug has been encountered only at night. Bright lights attract him, though he favors those which are high above the earth. A woman who is leaning from an upper story window of a lighted room invariably catches his eye, and then she catches it. If he persists in his depredations, the city council will soon be offering a bounty for his extermination.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Goldfields of Alaska.

Casey Moran, who arrived in the city last Sunday from Juneau, Alaska, for a short stay, brings down some interesting gossip from that faroff Eureka. He says that many mines are being developed near Juneau, and that good prospects are being located by the score. The Juneau Mining company has about finished its new mill and will soon begin crushing ore.

According to recent advices from Cook's Inlet, the section attracting the most attention, it is learned that miners are making from $3 to $20 a day each, and are able to work nine months each year. Fully 150 men have outfitted at Juneau for this locality, and many intend going up early in the spring. The Silver Queen, below Juneau and across the channel from the famous Treadwell, is turning out some very rich ore and is attracting much attention.

Mr. Moran says there are numbers of people going into the Yukon, despite the fact that there are many at Juneau who have been in there, and who would not go back for anything. He adds:

"There is one thing I like about that country, and that is the patriotism of the natives to America. They absolutely refuse to do work of any kind on the Fourth of July, no matter how much money is offered."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

The First Electric Organ.

The first electric organ in America was put into a church at Taunton, Mass., during the month of July, two years ago. The church which has the honor of first using the electric fluid for the purpose of driving its organ was the St. Thomas church of the city above mentioned, and the experiment was a brilliant success. In fact, about all the church organist has to do now at St. Thomas' is to press the button and the electricity does the rest. The organ is not nearly so massive as church organs usually are, the cumbersome keyboard being entirely dispensed with.—St. Louis Republic.

Letters by Bicycle.

A young man named Bennett has put his bicycle to profitable use in the Australian goldfields by establishing with it a postal route between Coolgardie, the center of the mining district, and Dundos, which is 280 miles away. Strapped on the wheel is a small letter box in which he carries letters between the two towns for a shilling apiece and telegrams for 5 shillings, making one round trip a week. A revolver, a sharp knife and a water bottle comprise the rest of his outfit.

A Sixty Miles an Hour Ship.

A Welshman proposes to build a ship that will have a speed of 60 miles an hour. The boat will be 550 feet long and 50 feet wide, with a flat bottom and wedge shaped bow and stern, of 10,000 tons displacement, and with eight paddlewheels on each side, each making 17 revolutions a minute.

LIME AS A FERTILIZER.

Its Value to the Farmer—How and When It May Be Applied.

If we study the composition of plants, we find that lime is the most important part of the mineral elements of nearly every one. And it is to be remembered that in the growth of plants every element found in them is indispensable. But how much more must it be so—if such a thing were possible, for one element to be more indispensable than another—for lime, which exists in such a large proportion, to be anything but indispensable. And this must be thought so as we consider that in the ash of hay one-eighth part is lime; in the ash of clover more than a third of it is lime; in the ash of potato tops nearly one-half is lime. The ashes of wood, which we think so valuable on account of the potash in them, have several times more lime than potash, the lime amounting to from 30 to 70 per cent. And there is not one plant grown that has not lime in its ashes. The same applies to potash and phosphoric acid, and reasonably these are supposed to be food for plants; why, then, is not lime a plant food? Surely it must be so considered. Thus writes that excellent authority, Henry Stewart, in The American Agriculturist. He also is authority for the following:

The best farmed localities in the world are those where the soil contains a large proportion of lime, being derived from the decomposition of limestone rocks. But it is not so much on account of the lime in the soil that the land is so well farmed and so productive, but mostly for the reason that lime being there abundant and cheap, the farmers burn the limestone and make lime, and apply it to the land. Lime only is a plant food, but limestone is not, and the soil may be well filled with limestone and yet be quite poor. Now lime is a very active chemical substance. This will be seen if some of it is put in some vinegar. This will foam up and boil over the cup, and a large quantity of gas will be evolved. In the end there will be no more acid in the vinegar. And this is one effect of lime on soil that is sour, such as swamp land, in which the excess of acid prevents the growth of any useful plants.

If we put some lime on a dead animal or on any other organic matter, it will quickly decompose it and reduce it to its original elements, and this is one effect of lime when used in a compost, the matters thus decomposed then becoming good manure and useful food for plants. And this same effect is produced in the soil when quicklime is applied, as it usually is in the fall when the land is prepared for wheat and grass and clover seeding. But the chemist may take some sand or other mineral matter and mix lime with it, and then add water, and the lime will dissolve quite a considerable quantity of this mineral matter, forming silicate of lime, and by taking the silica from the potash, or the phosphate, or magnesia, or the alumina, etc., that the soil is made up of, the lime renders these elements of plant food soluble and available for the crops.

Now this is a small part of the natural history of lime, as it is used in good farming. And with such a history we must realize its value to the farmer, quite independently of the fact whether it is actually a plant food or not. And as the season is approaching when the land is in the best condition for the application of lime, as lime is most soluble in cold water, and the wheat crop is most convenient for it, it is a question for all of us if it is not advisable to so use it, and gather the fruits of its good effects on the soil. The freshly burned lime only is used, and 20 to 40 bushels per acre is the usual quantity. It is left in heaps in the field, preferably of one bushel each, two rods apart, and in a few days it falls to a fine powder by the action of the moisture of the air, or a shower of rain, when it is easily spread quite evenly—so as to just whiten the surface—with a long handled shovel. But when lime is thus used for the wheat, it is not advisable to use superphosphate until the spring. It can then be used to advantage.

Cottonseed Meal to Swine.

The results of an investigation made at the Iowa station on feeding cotton seed and other meals to swine seem to warrant the following conclusions: 1. Cottonseed meal is fatal to hogs when fed in sufficient quantity; the total amount required to prove fatal being in this case from 27 to 33 pounds per hog. 2. Hogs in this experiment were fed without injury for 17 weeks following cattle that were fed from four to seven pounds of cottonseed meal per head daily. 3. Cottonseed meal added to a corn and cob meal ration for hogs materially increased and cheapened the gains over corn and cob meal alone. 4. Cut clover hay added to a corn and cob meal ration and soaked 12 hours before feeding gave no advantage in gain over corn and cob meal alone.

Fighting Cutworms.

In a bulletin from the New Jersey station it is stated that clover or sod land is most frequently infested by cutworms, which are less frequently found on late cultivated land. The worms are especially abundant in crimson clover. Among the remedies suggested clean culture is placed first, prominently associated with early fall plowing. Applying a top dressing of kainit and nitrate of soda in the early spring if corn is to be planted is advised, the seeding to be delayed until a rain has carried the fertilizers into the soil. Distributing clover or bran that has been moistened with paris green about the fields is also recommended.

Geo. Reinhakle and wife and sister, Miss Lena Reinhakle, accompanied by Les Maupin, came down from Big Pine last Monday, returning the next day.

The Weather Bureau Office at this this place has been furnished with a unique little machine, called a thermometric sun recorder. It registers by electricity.

Modena Mention

Master Johnny Calloway is on the sick list.

Mr. James Jenkins of Georges Creek has been in our vicinity several days trading and talking trade. He is well pleased with this part of the valley.

The male members of the Calloway tribe together with Mr. A A. Neil and Mr. David Rogers went to Waucoba Canyon last week for wood and posts.

The social function given by the people of this vicinity on the night of the 15 inst. was a success beyond the expectations of any one. Notwithstanding the inclemancy of the weather there was a larger attendance that the house could well accomodate. Our people thought they had a good time at the New Year's party, but since the fifteenth they find that the "more the merrier" is a trueism not to be disputed. It was estimated that about one hundred were present, the the most of them coming from the towns Big Pine and Independence. On account of the darkness of the night and poor roads, (the Independence people think we should place an electric light over the Black Rock spring,) some of the pleasure seekers narrowly escaped broken heads, but hearts were light, and all went merry as a marriage bell. A beautiful supper was contributed and served by the Modena ladies between the hours of 11 p. m and 1 a. m., to which all done ample justice; one young man partaking three times to the great anxiety of his many friends. "Boots" waited on the tables and no one went hungry while he was by. Dancing commenced at six oclock and continued all night; no one wished to leave until it began to grow light in the east, on account of the intense darkness. Excellent music was furnished for the occasion by Mr. and Mrs. Matlack, Messrs Ed. Shepherd, Freeman Mitchell and D. J. Hession. Harry Cook acted as floor conductor and a better one could not have been found. We did not learn the names of all the gentlemen present but the ladies who came from afar were as follows; Mrs. Emma Reinhakle, the Misses Lena Reinhakle, June Skinner, Clara Eldred, Ora Eldred, Gertie Mitchell, Nancy Bodle, Maggie Peterson, Carrie Gregg; from Independence, Madams Hession, Gunn, Matlack, Mulholland, the Misses Lizzie Thompson, Annie Schabbell, Alice Rose and Margie Bell. The proceeds of the supper will serve as a nucleus for the building of a hall at Modena for the use of public entertainments.

There will be another dance at Mr. Neil's building on the night of January 31st, to which the pnblic is cordially invited. No one who likes to trip the light fantastic will regret attending, for the nights will be light, and there will be no danger of falling into the lake, or being stranded on the black rocks, and the Modena people know just how to make visitors have a good time. NONPARIEL.

Ordinance No. 56.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every person engaged in the business of raising grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the County of Inyo, State of California, must annually, in advance, procure a license therefor from the Tax-Collector of said Inyo County, and must make therefor the following payment:

1. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control five thousand sheep or more shall constitute the first class, and must pay One Hundred and twenty-five dollars per annum for the first five thousand sheep, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of dollars and fifty cents per annum.

2. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control four thousand sheep and less than five thousand constitute the second class, and must pay One Hundred dollars per annum for the first four thousand, and for each additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

3. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control three thousand five hundred sheep and less than four thousand constitute the third class, and must pay eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents for the first three thousand five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

4. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control three thousand sheep and less than three thousand five hundred constitute the fourth class, and must pay seventy-five dollars per annum for the first three thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

5. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control two thousand five hundred sheep and less than three thousand constitute the fifth class and must pay sixty-two dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first two thousand five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

6. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control two thousand sheep and less than two thousand five hundred constitute the sixth class, and must pay fifty dollars per annum for the first two thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

7. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control one thousand five hundred sheep and less than two thousand constitute the seventh class, and must pay thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first one thousand five hundred and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

8. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control one thousand sheep and less than one thousand five hundred constitute the eighth class, and must pay twenty-five dollars per annum for the first one thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

9. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control five hundred sheep and less than one thousand constitute the ninth class and must pay twelve dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep, the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

10 Those owning or having in their possession and under their control a less number than five hundred sheep constitute the tenth class, and must pay, for every one hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

SECTION 2. The license provided for by this ordinance shall be deemed a debt due to the said County of Inyo, and the Tax-Collector of the said Inyo County shall have the collection of said license, and it is hereby made his duty to collect the same, and against every person required to take out a license under the provisions of this ordinance, who fails or neglects, or refuses to take out such license, the said Tax-Collector may direct suit to be brought in the name of the said County of Inyo as plaintiff, for the recovery of said license, and in such case, either the Tax-Collector or the attorney for the said plaintiff in said suit, may make the necessary affidavit for, and a writ of attachment may issue without any bond being given on behalf of the plaintiff, and in case of recovery by the said plaintiff, fifty dollars damages must be added to the judgment and costs, to be collected from the defendant.

SECTION 3. The County Auditor of said Inyo County shall prepare and have printed, suitable blank licenses for the said Tax Collector to carry out the provisions of this ordinance, with a blank receipt attached, for the signature of the Tax-Collector when sold.

SECTION 4. The Tax-Collector shall collect a fee of one dollar for each license sold, which shall be paid into the Salary Fund of the said Inyo County.

Section 5. Every person, firm, or corporation, engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the said County of Inyo, before procuring the license in this ordinance provided, must make and file with the said Tax Collector his, their, or its affidavit; and if made on behalf of a firm, to be made by a member thereof, and if on behalf of a corporation, to be made by any person on its behalf; which affidavit must state his place of residence, or if a firm, its place of business firm name, and the residence of the members thereof; and if a corporation, its corporate name, its name, principal place of business, and the name of the state or nation under the laws of which the same has been formed; that he, or they, or it is engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep, (or all, as the case may be,) in the County of Inyo, State of California; the number of sheep of which he, they, or it is the owner, or possessed and controls, in the said County of Inyo, and the mark or marks, brand or brands, on said sheep.

Section 6. Should any person, firm or corporation fail, neglect, or refuse to file with the Tax-Collector the affidavit mentioned in section 5 of this ordinance, or should the said affidavit, in the opinion of the Tax-Collector, fail to truly state the number of sheep of which he, they, or it is the owner, or possessed, and under his, their, or its control, in said County of Inyo, it shall be the duty of said Tax Collector to corrall, and carefully count and estimate said sheep.

Section 7. Each license issued under the provisions of this ordinance shall be in force and of virtue from and including the first day of April of the year in which the same shall be procured, until and including the thirty first day of March of the following year.

SECTION 8. All moneys collected for licenses under the provisions of this ordinance shall be paid over to the County Treasurer of said Inyo County as other moneys, and shall be placed to the credit of the Salary fund of said County.

SECTION 9. This Ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and Ordinance No. 51 of said Board of Supervisors passed on the 5th day of January, 1894, is hereby repealed, and all ordinances and parts of Ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith are each and all of them hereby repealed.

SECTION 10. This Ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

Two Rhymes.

Sir William Drummond, finding himself one evening outside a tavern—perhaps the historic Mermaid—peeped in to see if by any chance a "wit combat," as Fuller has it, was in progress. One of the company spied him and dragged him into the room, where he found assembled round the table Ben Jonson, Michael Drayton, Sir Robert Kerr and Sir William Alexander. In such excellent company he passed several hours, and when the time came to pay the reckoning the company fell to rhyming about it. Of all the rhymes the following by Sir William Drummond was voted the best:

I, Bopeep,
Saw you four sheep,
And each of you his fleece.
The reckoning is five shilling;
If each of you be willing,
It's fifteen pence apiece.

More than 100 years afterward Allan Cunningham tells this story of Robert Burns. Strolling one day in Cumberland, the poet lost his friends, and thinking to find them at a certain tavern he popped his head in at the door. Seeing no one there but three strangers, he apologized and was about to retire when one of the strangers called out, "Come in, Johnny Peep." This invitation the convivial poet readily accepted and spent a very pleasant time with his newly found companions. As the conversation began to flag it was proposed that each should write a verse and place it together with two and six under the candlestick, the best poet to take the half crowns, while the unsuccessful rhymers were to settle the bill among them. According to Cunningham, Burns obtained the stakes by writing:

Here am I, Johnny Peep;
I saw three sheep,
And these three sheep saw me.
Half a crown apiece
Will pay for their fleece,
And so Johnny Peep goes free.

—London Standard.

What Makes a Good News Reporter.

One of the best reporters I ever knew was a man who could not spell four words correctly to save his life, and his verb did not always agree with the subject in person and number, but he always got the fact so exactly, and he saw the picturesque, the interesting and important aspect of it so vividly that it was worth another man's while, who possessed the knowledge of grammar and spelling, to go over the report and write it out. Now, that was a man who had genius. He had a talent the most indubitable, and he got handsomely paid, in spite of his lack of grammar, because, after his work had been done over by a scholar, it was really beautiful.

But any man who is sincere and earnest, and not always thinking about himself, can learn to be a good reporter. He can learn to ascertain the truth. He can acquire the habit of seeing. When he looks at a fire, what is the most important thing about that fire? Here, let us say, are five houses burning. Which is the greatest? Whose store is that which is burning, and who has met with the greatest loss? Has any individual perished in the conflagration? Are there any very interesting circumstances about the fire? How did it occur? Was it like Chicago, where a cow kicked over a spirit lamp and burned up the city? All these things the reporter has to judge about. He is the eye of the paper, and he is there to see which is the vital fact in the story and to produce it, tell it, write it out.—Charles A. Dana in McClure's Magazine.

Amusing Blunder of Empress Eugenie.

An amusing incident occurred while the pages were rehearsing the part they had to play in certain festivities. They were chosen from among the diminutive grooms in the emperor's stables, and when the costume was ready a pretty boy, who seemed about 12 years of age, was brought to the empress for her examination and approval. The dress pleased her, and she turned the boy around to inspect him fully, setting his velvet cap jauntily on his curls, which she arranged to her satisfaction, adjusting his ruff, etc.; then, kindly patting his cheek, she inquired:

"How old are you, my little friend?"

"Twenty, madam."

The scream of dismay which followed and the amusement of the bystanders may be imagined.—Century.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

STORIES OF HEROISM.

The Hero of Franklin.

Nov. 30, 1864, Schofield dealt Hood's invading army a stunning blow at Franklin. Two features of the battle placed it among the brilliant and bloody contests of the time—the fierce charge of Cleburne's Confederate division and the equally fierce counter charge of Opdycke's Union brigade. With a yell Cleburne's men burst through the outer Union line and dashed over the half mile of space between it and the stronghold on Columbia pike. At the rear works the onset of the Confederates was so impetuous that the soldiers on the works were literally run over, and in a few minutes, before the reserves in the third line comprehended the crisis, Cleburne's banners waved over them, his men occupied a breach the width of a full regiment, and, intoxicated with triumph, were dashing ahead down the pike to pounce upon the Union reserves—Opdycke's small brigade. Opdycke had no orders except to rest his weary troops, but the moment the men in gray were seen swarming and shooting where they had no business to be his commands rang out clearly and calmly, as though he had rehearsed them: "First brigade, fall in! Charge bayonets! Double quick!"

GENERAL OPDYCKE.

Taking obedience for granted, the leader spurred his horse toward the point of danger, shooting right and left with his revolver. After emptying the chambers he clubbed the weapon, and after breaking the barrel from its handle over the head of some luckless gray jacket, who had got too far on the wrong side of the boundary line, he jumped from the saddle and took a musket from the hands of a wounded soldier, striking this way and that until he stood at the works surrounded by his men. Then for an hour in that narrow space raged the hottest open field and breastwork battle of the war. Often rival flags floated side by side upon the parapet and their bearers and defenders fought around them with clubbed rifles and with bayonets used as rapiers.

Ready to Do and Die.

Nov. 30, 1863, the long and remarkable campaign of strategy between Lee and Meade ended at Mine Run. Lee's army occupied the wooded slope west of the stream and Meade's that on the east. Meade desired to strike Orange Court House and Lee to cover that point. Only slight intrenchments had been thrown up by Lee when Meade gave the order on the 29th for an attack all along the line at 8 o'clock on the 30th. The corps of Sedgwick and French were in position along the run, and Warren, with 20,000 men, had marched beyond Lee's right for the purpose of delivering a sudden flank assault in the style of Stonewall Jackson. After a trying march through a rain which froze as it fell, Warren's troops reached the position on the 29th.

Sedgwick's guns opened at 7 in the morning. Lee's lines were sheltered by woods and little damage was done by the Union fire, yet a response was made gun for gun. The Union infantry lay concealed in the dense thicket, "held like hounds in leash" for the word to go. In spite of the terrible prospect before them the men engaged in a rivalry, brigades and divisions boasting that they would be first in the enemy's works and inviting one another to a reunion inside the bloody parapets. More desperate still it was in front of Warren. Daylight revealed a new and strong line of earthworks extending across the whole front. In anticipation of their fate Warren's soldiers pinned strips of paper bearing their names upon their overcoats and awaited the command to go forward and be sacrificed. But just as the buglers rode out to sound the charge a dispatch came over the field wire from headquarters, "Suspend the attack!"

The Sunburst at Austerlitz.

Dec. 2, 1805, Napoleon won Austerlitz by the decisive charge of Soult's column up the heights of Pratzen. The allies stripped the heights of infantry in order to assail the French flanks. They depended upon artillery and the Russian cavalry standing guard over it upon a neighboring plain. Napoleon had stationed Soult's corps in a valley under the heights, hidden from the enemy by a veil of mist. When he saw, or rather heard, the movements of the enemy around his right flank, where he had placed Davoust's corps to welcome him, as the saying is, he asked Soult how long it would take for the infantry in the valley to reach the heights of Pratzen. "Twenty minutes, sire. Shall I go forward?" "No. Wait 20 minutes! When the enemy is making a false move, be careful not to interrupt him."

Orders were given to Soult about 9 o'clock. His soldiers were compelled to climb a steep hill to reach the tableland on the farther edge of which the heights arose, crowned with cannon. The combat was indeed terrible. Seeing the allied cavalry and infantry giving way, Napoleon in person led in his mounted reserves and swept the plains. Meanwhile Soult's infantry stormed the last line on Pratzen and burst among the guns, waving their banners to celebrate victory. A lull in the firing caused the smoke to roll away, as the cannonading had already dispelled the mist, and suddenly, as though with an unseen hand, the veil, which throughout the morning had obscured the orb of day, was rent apart. Then it was Napoleon saw and welcomed the "sun of Austerlitz."

The Lending of Pictures.

A small circulating loan collection of pictures has proved a satisfactory part of the attempt of Hull House, Chicago, to make art a means of education. The collection numbers at present not more than 70 pictures, and very little more than $100 has been expended upon it. The pictures are, for the most part, photographs selected with great care from choice things only, whether modern or old, and with a view to variety of appeal to the interest and taste of the borrowers. Some water color sketches have been given and lent, and the collection contains an Arundel print and several colored prints of Fra Angelico's angels. The latter are so popular as to be engaged in advance.

The loan and return of each picture is recorded, with the date and the name and address of the borrower, upon a card. It is expected that the picture will be either exchanged or renewed at the end of two weeks. The borrowers frequently become attached to them and prefer to keep the old one longer rather than to have a new one. Within a short walk from Hull House a little parlor has been completely transformed by the Fra Angelico over the mantel and the Luca della Robias on the wall. A few doors down the street a tiny bedroom has been changed from a place in which a fragile factory girl slept the sleep of the exhausted into one where she "just loves to lie in bed and look at my pictures. It's so like art class."—Forum.

The Yellow Jacket's Sting.

"While watching for a shot at a deer near a deer lick one fall I noticed a huge yellow jackets' nest hanging from the limb of an ironwood sapling not far from a tree I had climbed up. A little before sunset I saw a fine buck making his way toward the lick. As he approached the yellow jackets' nest I noticed a movement in the foliage overhead, and the next instant a catamount plunged headlong through the leaves and landed on the buck's neck. The buck stumbled, but soon got on his feet, and the catamount, who had struck the limb to which the yellow jackets' nest was attached, sprang off and began to root and tear in the undergrowth, for the disturbed insects had poured out and were stinging it unmercifully. The buck dashed out of sight like a streak, and from the way he snorted I judged that some of the angry hornets had got at him also. The catamount ran up a beech tree and leaped from one treetop to another till it couldn't go any farther, when it tumbled to the ground, wounded to death by the sting of the yellow jackets."—New York Tribune.

American Rural Festivals.

Of most respectable antiquity is the custom of celebrating nature's largess to Mother Earth at midsummer by a pageant in which the beneficiaries adorn themselves with garlands to ride, drive or walk in joyous procession. "Oh, 'tis the merry time," wrote old Stevenson in 1661, "wherein honest neighbors make good cheer, and God is glorified in his blessings on the earth." Variants of this custom were familiar in many parts of England, and, curiously enough, their gradual disappearance from the soil of the mother country seems to have been followed by their appearance in full vigor in Puritan America. For some years past our country, from Maine to California, has witnessed a series of summer rural fetes, variously conceived, carried out with more or less attention to detail, each stamped vividly with the color of the region that gave it birth, and all seeming to have been fashioned without reference to a common original.—Mrs. Burton Harrison in Century.

Sugar Made of Sawdust.

If a Michigan chemist realizes his expectations, the sawmills in the pine forests will become active competitors of the Louisiana sugar plantations. The audacious scientist declares that he can make granulated sugar out of sawdust, and in support of the claim he exhibits a substance which looks, smells and tastes like glucose. He says that he first converts the sawdust into starch and turns the starch into sugar, which, he declares, crystallizes into as pretty granulated sugar as was ever turned out of a sugar refinery. But his most astonishing claim is that when he has perfected his process he will have no use for a tariff or bounty, for he will make sugar cheaper than Cuba, China, Germany or any other country can possibly produce it.—Philadelphia Press.

A Simple Expedient.

Astronomers have suddenly discovered the force of the story of Mohammed and the mountain. After laborious toil at constructing enormous and complex mechanism by which great telescopes can be directed to any quarter of the heavens they have all at once bethought themselves of the plan of leaving the big tube immovable and horizontal, and throwing the image of the desired star into it by means of a reflector. This surprisingly simple plan is to be followed in mounting the great telescope which is to be a feature of the Paris exhibition in 1900.—Springfield Republican.

Dr. Burggrave's Theory.

Dr. Burggrave of Ghent, who has passed his hundredth year, has written a book on longevity. The only way to live long, he says, is for each person to live according to his proper individuality, to select what is good for oneself and to avoid all else. In other words, one must live as nearly as possible in harmony with his surroundings. The contented mind, the happy heart—these things prolong life more than dieting and regular hours of sleep.

She Wasn't Green.

Miss Rebecca B. Draper, who carries on a real estate business at Montclair, N. J., has been the means of arresting a "green goods" man in Detroit who pestered her with repeated letters trying to sell her his wares. She reported him to the authorities, and he will probably go to prison.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

It Was Made by a Profuse Frenchman In His Leave Taking.

A citizen of France who has an inveterate habit of confounding everything which is said to him and has been endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of our vernacular was about leaving his boarding house for a more comfortable quarter. All the little mysteries of his wardrobe, including his last nether garment and umbrella, had been packed up, when he bethought to himself the unpleasant duty now devolving upon him—that of bidding "ze folks" goodby.

After shaking his fellow boarders cordially by the hand and wishing them, with incessant bowing, "ze verree best success in ze virl" and "ze benediction du chief," he retired in search of his "dear landlady," to give her also his blessing. He met her at the staircase, and advancing, hat in hand, with a thousand scrapes, commenced his speech: "Ah, madame, I'm going to leave you. You have been verree amiable to me, madame. I will nevare forget you for zat. If in my countree, I would ask zer government to give you a pension, madame." The good lady put down her head and blushed modestly, while our Frenchman proceeded: "Vell, I must go. You know in zeese life it is full of pain and trouble. If Got adopted ze virl vich Lamartine made in his poesie, zen zure should be no more pain. Adieu, madame—adieu! Perhaps forever."

Thereupon the Frenchman was making his exit, when he was suddenly called back by his landlady, who interestedly inquired, "Why, Mr. C——, you have forgotten your latchkey." Mr. C—— appeared amazed, apparently not understanding his interrogator. "Yes," continued Mrs. M——, "you know it is the rule for all boarders to give me their latchkeys." "Oh, madame," interrupted the Frenchman, with enthusiasm, "I vill give you not one—not one, but zouzands!" and, applying the action to the word, he sprang toward Mrs. M——, and, embracing her tightly in his arms, kissed her most heroically. The affrighted Mrs. M——, recovering herself at length, cried out, "The key, Mr. C——, the key!" Frenchy, looking confused, confounded, ejaculates with heavy sighs: "Oh, madame, I zot you ax me for one kees, and I give it to you. Vat a fatale mistake!"—Scottish American.

A BIT OF PENCIL.

Prized Because It Is a Veteran and Went Through the War.

"I have a very fine and choice cabinet of relics and specimens of the late war," said J. Fillmore of South Dakota. "In the collection is an old fashioned common lead pencil, only three-quarters of an inch long, which was given to me by Major J. B. Fairbanks, who carried it through the entire war, and in presenting it to me the major gave me this biographical sketch of the pencil: 'This pencil is a veteran of the late war. When it enlisted, it was round and of full length.

"'When the war was over, it was, like many other veterans, badly used up. During its service it campaigned in dust and mud, over the hills and plains of Maryland and Virginia, through the swamps of Mississippi, across the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee, again through Virginia, from the Wilderness to Appomattox. It has watched upon the picket line in daylight and in darkness, in heat and in cold, in rain and in snow. It has taken part in many skirmishes, and in more than half a score of regular battles, and in addition it went through the siege of Petersburg, and was engaged in several of the assaults upon that stronghold. With it, for eight months, while the owner was first sergeant of his company, he kept the daily record and report of the company.

"'It wrote the name and the number of those on detached service, of the absent with leave, of those daily detailed for ordinary camp duties or occasionally for some special duty, of the number present for duty and of the sick in quarters. At the roll call after battle it has noted the names of those who did not answer. It has recorded the names of those men as killed in battle, wounded in battle, died of wounds, died of disease, discharged on account of wounds received and disease contracted in line of duty. In its own way it has written its humble page in the history of the most eventful epoch of all times. Preserve it and cherish it.'"—Kansas City Times.

"Vox Populi," Not "Vox Dei."

We all know a favorite and much quoted proverb is "Vox populi, vox Dei." Is it not, perhaps, of all proverbs, the most fallacious? Was it not Carlyle who asked, "How many fools does it take to make a public?" Does not another popular proverb say, "Too many cooks spoil the broth?" It is a vulgar error to believe that many persons together can decide better upon a subject than one person alone. An optimist might argue that this belief has taken birth from the modesty of mankind, a pessimist that it has arisen from the desire to escape responsibility.

The popular notion is that a number of intellects can be summed up into one hole, but the fact is they limit each other and act as a clog. "Men," said Galilei, "are not like a number of horses attached to a carriage, all pulling together, but rather like a number of loose horses running a race, of which one gains the prize."—Blackwood's Magazine.

IT WAS GOOD WHISKY.

But Blackburn and Carlisle Proved They Were Judges of Flavor.

Joe C. S. Blackburn and John G. Carlisle were some years ago visiting a common friend at his summer residence. The host had some old Kentucky whisky of which he was very proud, and this was, in his estimation, the richest treat he could offer the Kentuckians. It lay in his cellars in the original package, and as the Kentuckians had about finished the pint which had just been drawn off he took occasion to say that the whisky was 19 years old.

"No," said Mr. Carlisle; "that's very good whisky, but it's only 17 years old."

Mr. Blackburn said, "That's right, John, and it came from Bourbon county, in my old district."

The host agreed that it was Bourbon county whisky, but maintained that it was 19 years old and asked his visitors for a candid opinion of its merits. Blackburn tried another glass and said, "I have only one fault to find, and that is a slight flavor of rusty metal." Carlisle filled again and said that, so far as he was concerned, he was unable to detect any flavor of metal, but that it did taste a little leathery.

This criticism rather wrought on the feelings of their host, who declared that it was impossible that either leather or metal could have come in contact with the goods, as they were still in the wood, and, as for the age, he would take them into the cellar, where they could satisfy themselves on that score. Into the cellar they went, and the seals showed that Mr. Carlisle's estimate of their age was correct. This the host confessed after an examination, but he refused to admit that there was any off flavor to his pet brand. The Kentuckians tasted again and were more firmly set in their opinions than before. Finally the host undertook to have the entire package decanted off to settle the dispute, and when the last dregs were reached an old fashioned carpet tack, with a leather washer, was found in the bottom of the barrel. That of course ended the discussion, and the host has never since disputed the word of a Kentuckian when he was talking about whisky.—Cincinnati Tribune.

HIGH, LOW JACK.

Fine ice means very cold weather, then comes a high old time in skating rinks, and skating ponds, on slides and rides, and we go home tired and overheated. It's the same old story of cooling off; off with wraps and on with all sorts of aches and pains, rheumatic, neuralgic, sciatic, lumbagic, including frost bites, backache, even toothache. They who dance must pay the piper. We cut up Jack and are brought low by our own folly. What of it, the dance will go on, all the same. It is generally known that St. Jacobs Oil will cure all such aches and pains separately or collectively, and the cry is on with the dance.

THE QUEEN.

He knows, the rogue on the tree,
That over mountain and lea
The spring is coming, coming,
Faster than eye can see.

Last week he was stark with cold,
Went heavy, songless and old.
Why, hark to the tune he is humming!
'Tis a song for the days of gold.

And her voice that calleth the swallows
Home, and the gold wren follows,
Nearer is coming and nearer,
Thrilling the hills and hollows.

And he knows, the rogue on the tree,
'Tis the queen from over the sea.
Her voice is sweeter and dearer
Than any blackbird's can be.
—New York Tribune.

NONA.

Some years ago I passed several weeks at a fishing village on the coast of Brittany. What a hole it was! But how picturesque! A miserable anchorage, for ten boats at the most, a single stony street, which I can compare to nothing better than a mountain torrent. On top of the hill a church, a veritable gothic toy, which stood in the middle of a cemetery from which a magnificent view of the ocean was obtained. Finding myself in the vein for work, I lingered in this out of the way corner until the end of the month of September, which by a rare chance in rainy Finistere, was that year exceptionally mild and clear.

But one cannot always compose verses and write, and a walk was my hygiene and my distraction. My most frequent promenade was along the beach, having on my right the bleak and rocky cliffs and on my left the uncovered stretches of sand—an immense desert of sand left bare by the outgoing tide. Two or three times I had exchanged civilities with some custom house officer going his rounds, his gun slung over his shoulder. I was so regular and peaceful a promenader that the sea swallows were no longer afraid of me and hopped in front of me, leaving the print of their star shaped feet in the wet sand. I walked six or eight kilometers a day and returned home with my pockets filled with those dainty shells which are found by burying the hand deep down in the damp pebbles.

This was my favorite excursion. However, on the days when a strong breeze was blowing and the tide was very high I abandoned the seashore, and climbing the village street I strolled along the sandy moor, or else I settled myself with a book on a bench in a corner of the cemetery, which was sheltered by the church tower from the west end.

It was a lovely spot, conducive to sadness and revery. The church tower stood out against the autumn sky, over which dark clouds were scurrying. Crows, whose nests were in the steeple, flew out with their hoarse cawing, and the shadow of their large wings glided over the scattered tombstones, almost hidden in the grass.

In the evening more than at any other time, the last rays of the setting sun bathing the sea as though with blood, the ragged branches of the skeleton of an old apple tree silhouetted against the crimson sky and the deep intense stillness of the wild home of the dead flooded my soul with melancholy.

It was on such an evening as I have just described that, wandering among the tombs, many of which bore under the sailor's name this mournful legend, "Died at sea," I read on a new cross the following words, which astonished and puzzled me: "Here reposes Nona Le Maguet. Died at sea Oct. 26, 1878, at the age of 19."

Died at sea! A young girl! Women hardly ever go out in the fishing boats. How did this happen?

"Well, monsieur," said a gruff voice behind me suddenly, "you are looking at poor Nona's tomb?"

I turned around and recognized an old sailor, with a wooden leg, whose good graces I had acquired by the aid of a few glasses of brandy, which I had given him in the taproom at the inn.

"Yes," I replied. "But I thought that you fishermen never permitted women to go out with you. I have even been told that they bring you misfortune."

"And that is the truth," responded the good man. "Besides, Nona never went into a boat. Would you like to know how the poor little one died? Well, I will tell you.

"First of all, I must tell you that Pierre, her father, was a topman, like myself, and an old comrade. At Bourget, when Admiral La Ronciere raised his golden helmet on the point of his saber, and we flung ourselves, hatchet in hand, on the embattled houses, we marched elbow to elbow, Pierre and I, and it was he who received me in his arms when those cursed Prussians put a ball in my thigh. That same evening in the ambulance at the fort Pierre held my hand to give me courage while the surgeon amputated my limb, and he was there at my bedside when the admiral brought me my medal. But those rascally Prussians got the best of us, and we were sent home. I, with my wooden leg, was practically helpless. But Pierre, who was uninjured, hired on board a fishing smack. Very soon afterward his wife died from an intermittent fever, leaving him the care of little Nona, who was going on 10 years of age.

"Naturally while the widower was at sea it was I, his comrade, I, the old bachelor, who cared for the little one. She was a good and pretty child, monsieur; courageous and sweet tempered. We very often went to the rocks at low tide to gather turtles, shrimps, prawn, and sometimes we were fortunate enough to find a lobster. Ah, but we were good friends!

"This went on for about two years. Nona had made her first communion, grown and shot up like a thistle in the sand. But one day the Amelia, Le Maguet's boat, was overtaken in a storm and wrecked. The skipper did not haul in his sail soon enough, and the boat struck on that reef you can see over there—just a little more to the starboard. There were four men in the crew—the skipper, two sailors and my poor Pierre. But the sea only gave up three of the drowned men and retained my comrade. Nona became an orphan. It goes without saying that I did my best to replace her father. But the child, even after the first sorrow passed away, did not seem to console herself. And do you know why, monsieur? Because of an idea all the women around here have. They believe that a soul must remain in pain unto the judgment day unless it reposes in consecrated ground. We men do not believe in all this nonsense when we know what happens when there is a death on board ship. But Nona could not be forced to believe other than the women had taught her and continued to burn candles at all the pardons in the neighboring towns for the repose of her father's soul.

"However, in spite of everything, time is a famous merchant of forgetfulness, and Nona after a few years appeared to me to become somewhat reconciled. Besides, her grief had not prevented her from growing handsomer and taking a pride in herself, and it is not because I loved her like a father, but, upon my honor, she was the freshest and prettiest young girl in the parish. We lived so happily together. We were not rich, to be sure, but we lived, and we enjoyed ourselves all the same. I had my pension and my medal, and then we used to go together to hunt for lobsters in the rocks. The trade is a paying one, and there is only one danger, that of being overtaken by the tide. Ah, unfortunately that was how she met her death, poor little one!

"One day when my rheumatism confined me to the house she went fishing alone. It was just such a day as today, the sky clear, the wind high. When the rock searchers gathered together with full baskets, they perceived that Nona failed to respond to their calls. There was no possible doubt. Great God, she had been delayed and surrounded by the rising tide! She had been drowned! Ah, what a night I passed, monsieur! At my age, yes, a hard hearted man like me, I sobbed like a woman. And the remembrance came to me of the poor child's belief that to go to heaven she must be interred in consecrated ground. Therefore as soon as the tide went down I went to the shore, and, with the others, searched for the body.

"And we found poor Nona," continued the old sailor in a trembling voice. "We found her on a rock covered with seaweed, where, knowing that she was going to die, the poor little one had prepared herself for death. Yes, monsieur, she had tied her skirts below the knees with her fichu, through modesty, and with her old idea uppermost had attached herself to the seaweed by her hair, her beautiful black hair, certain that she would thus be found and interred in consecrated ground. And I can say, I, who know what bravery is, that there is perhaps not a man brave enough to do likewise."

The old man was silent. By the last gleam of the twilight I saw two great tears rolling down his weather beaten cheeks. We descended to the village side by side in silence. I was profoundly touched by this simple girl's courage, who, even in the agonies of death, had retained the modesty of her sex and the piety of her race, and before me in the distant immensity, in the solitudes of the heavens and the sea, gleamed out the beacon lights and the stars.

Oh, brave men of the sea! Oh, noble Brittany!—From the French of Francois Coppee For Romance.

Dickens' Characters.

Not even Dickens, I think, found room for a butcher amid his Babylon of trades. A bailiff he has and eight sheriff's officers, half a dozen beadles and half as many more brokers. The sheriff's officer is, of course, a familiar enough figure from the days of our literary drama.

An ingenious American has compiled a list of Dickens' characters, classified by callings, and it reads like nothing so much as a trades directory. There are architects, auctioneers, bankers, barbers, boarding house keepers, blacksmiths, carpenters, carriers, chandlers, chemists, clerks (a perfect army of them), coachmen, coal merchants, constables, corn chandlers, costumers, detectives, doctors, domestic servants, dry salters, engineers, engine drivers, farmers, fishermen, gamekeepers, grocers, green grocers, haberdashers, hopgrowers, jailers and turnkeys, laborers, lamplighters, lawyers, law stationers, locksmiths, manufacturers, merchants, medical students, money lenders, notaries, hostlers, pawnbrokers, parish clerks, plasterers, porters, postmasters, potboys, reporters, robemakers, saddlers, sailors, sextons, shipwrights, stewards, stokers, stonemasons, sugar bakers, tailors, teachers, tobacconists, toymakers and merchants, undertakers, watermen, weavers, wharfingers, wheelwrights.

The list might be made longer, but that perhaps is long enough to make you realize how amply provided with trades and tradesmen are the teeming streets of Dickens' imagination.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Iridium.

Singularly enough, iridium, though a metal of such comparative rarity, is said to be a source of no small trouble in the operations of our mints, on account of the difficulty experienced there in separating it from gold bullion. Practically, as is well known, this metal is utilized to some extent for making instruments of delicacy which require to possess the property of not corroding, and is obtained from iridosmine, a natural alloy of iridium, osmium, rhodium, platinum and ruthenium, an extraordinarily white mixture of rare metals, much of it being found in washing for gold in the beach sands of Oregon, and it resists the action of all single acids. In its use for tipping gold pens, in which it is specially serviceable, the grains of it, which are flat, like gold dust, are picked out with magnifying glasses.—New York Sun.

A LOVE SONG.

My little leaves, why are you glad?
Answer, quivering little leaves,
Small clapping leaves, so freshly clad
In a green world that never grieves.
Answer me, for my heart is sad!
Love God, love God! they sing,
Gay as the birds a-wing.

My little flowers, what's your delight?
Now answer, for my soul believes
In your sweet petals, pure and white,
Sweet purity no man deceives.
Answer, my flowerets fair and bright.
Love God, love God! they sing,
Gay as the birds a-wing.

Fresh blades of grass, you cheerful seem
What is it that all grief relieves?
Thick ye upspring, a fair sunbeam
In your low stems its brightness weaves.
How do you keep that sunny gleam?
Love God, love God! they sing,
Gay as the birds a-wing.

The flowers and grass make their reply,
With all the merry clapping leaves,
And echoing the holy cry
The drooping heart its joy retrieves.
All voices to their Maker fly.
Love God, love God! they sing,
Gay as the birds a-wing.

FIRST LOVE.

I have for years led a roving life and am most at home in railway carriages, waiting rooms, hotels and restaurants. On this account my reading has been of all kinds, and I have given up wishing to be dainty in my literary diet. Only German and French romances and novels by authors unknown to me, or writers whose style I do not enjoy, inspire me with an unconquerable respect.

Books by these authors I never venture to open, even in the greatest dearth of reading matter. Besides I eagerly welcome everything published by the latest journals and look through each weekly and monthly periodical that I come across in dining or waiting room.

That is why I have a succession of fragments of a considerable number of stories in my head, and as their classification does not especially interest me it thus happens that I occasionally join the end of one to the beginning of the other. Some of these dovetailed stories please me quite as well as the noted novels of famous authors.

This is a matter of taste, and I allow myself no criticism. Sometimes I finish for myself a story, the beginning of which I have read, or invent the first chapter for the conclusion of a romance which has fallen into my hands. Then, after a time, it is difficult to distinguish between what is mine and what is not mine. In most cases indeed I have of a morning when I leave a city forgotten what I have read there on the preceding evening. But when a story has pleased me I enjoy repeating it to myself in the railway carriage, and then it becomes fixed in my memory and recurs later, at irregular intervals, as something personally experienced or again invented by myself.

The following narrative is one of these tales. I have forgotten where I read it for the first time. Whether the tale was exactly as I now have it in my mind I do not any longer know. But the idea is not mine. I believe I found it in a Paris review. Then it must have been many years since, for several omnivorous readers among my French acquaintances, of whom I made inquiry regarding that easily recognized sketch, could not remember to have read it. It is also possible that I found it in Berlin or London. Should the owner at any time reclaim it, I will return his property with thanks. Here is the story as it has shaped itself little by little in my head:

The numerous guests of the countess had been slowly retiring since 11 o'clock, and about 12 there were only some half dozen people assembled in the salon, the very intimate friends of the house. The handsome Palamede had pronounced his verdict upon the notable toilets of the evening, Rene had recounted the last duel, Edmond the last steeplechase. The scandal of the day had been commented upon in the usual philanthropic fashion, and for the first time for half an hour the conversation had languished.

The countess turned to her neighbor, the quiet Gaston.

"You are making more noise than usual this evening," said she. "You have been sleeping this half hour with open eyes." The gentleman addressed, who had been sitting upon a low chair, earnestly engaged in keeping up a fire in the chimney, in which he had displayed the ability that, according to a French proverb, is a privilege of lovers and philosophers, turned slowly and made answer, "I am thinking of my first love."

"Gratitude does honor to the receiver and to the giver alike," said the countess. "Tell us the story of the first love that still makes you dream today."

Gaston slowly rubbed his thin hands, as was his habit, and without waiting for further urging began as follows:

"When I say my first love, I do not mean the very first. This indeed caused me in its time much pain and anxious joy, but that is long since forgotten. Many a time, when I now recall it, it seems as though I thought of another's love tale and not my own. I was at the time perhaps 12 or 13 years old, and she was the sister of my schoolfellow Jacques.

"I saw her for the first time upon our playground, where she appeared with her mother, during an intermission, to see her brother. It was winter. The yard was full of snow, and a fierce battle waged between the opposing factions into which the school was divided. At the moment when I saw her at the entrance to the playground, a harder snowball hit me on the head, so that I fell down unconscious. A few minutes after, when I again came to myself, I was sitting upon a chair in the porter's room, and both ladies, the mother and sister of my friend, stood near and regarded me anxiously.

"The next morning she caused inquiry to be made after my health through Jacques, and on the following Sunday I called upon her. I spoke no word. I ventured scarcely to raise my eyes, but I would willingly have thrown myself a thousand times into fire or water to again draw upon me the solicitous glance of the beautiful maiden.

"In the evening I invented for myself the most marvelous heroic deeds wherewith I would fain have aroused her astonishment and compelled her admiration. Anything else I neither desired nor expected. The unconscious dawn of love in the heart of youth belongs with its peculiarities only to pure childhood.

"The young heart is foolishly happy in sacrifice, quietly content and blindly conceited and vain. It cannot yet love, it needs but to be loved and admired; to bestow happiness is not its object, and the only joy it knows is a blissful unrest; its only need, to receive love without bestowing it. In after years one gives without receiving and is very well off with that. So everything in the world is arranged in the best manner, where there are people who find their joy in giving, and others who are happiest in receiving.

"But how short and sweet is the one time when one gives and receives, when one loves and is beloved! I have known it, but she who then made me so inexpessibly happy has now left me. How beautiful was the world when I saw it with her; how blue the heaven; how soft the air! We hastened, hand in hand, from place to place, and wherever we went, laughingly joy stepped forth to greet us, begging us to linger. We went laughing, singing, rejoicing along, assured of our good fortune everywhere.

"Sometimes our riotous delight, overstepping all bounds, startled sober people. But the stern glance softened when it rested upon us: 'They are young. Let them enjoy themselves,' said the old, and went along sorrowfully smiling. She clung so tightly to my arm, she nestled so closely to my side, that I thought I could never lose her. The idea of a possible change never came to me, never troubled me. Thus I lived a long time. Weeks, months, years flew by, and I heeded them not.

"One evening, after we had spent the day yet more madly and merrily than usual, she suddenly appeared to me discontented and cold. A terrible fear which I am not able to describe fell upon me. An icy coldness crept over me. 'She will leave you,' said I to myself, 'certainly, surely, she will leave you.' It occurred to me how little I had really concerned myself about her, how I perhaps had expected too much of her truth and constancy. For the first time I felt my trust in myself and in her waver, and anxiously I gazed into her eyes. But her glance turned wearily from me and gave me no answer.

"My rest was gone, my life no more the same. It is true she still pressed me impetuously to her bosom again and again, but the sweetness of her kiss had vanished. Often she pushed me coldly away, and I saw to my unutterable sorrow that my love wearied her. And when I once at a later hour returned home, tired and dejected, I found the room dark, cold and empty. She, my joy, my light, my all, had vanished.

"Now began a miserable existence for me. The loss that I had suffered gnawed at my heart, but my care was to conceal this loss from the world. I endeavored to show a cheerful, happy countenance. I sought the society of gay young people. I bestowed great and hitherto unknown and ridiculed care upon my person and toilet. My enemies said of me that I had for a long time rouged in order to hide the paleness of my cheeks. That is not true, but I may as well confess that I bought a little flask of newly invented tincture that was to restore the color of youth to my whitening hair.

"This hypocritical farce did not long continue. I was soon tired of the strife, and today the opinion of the world troubles me no more. I know that my darling has left me; that nothing will bring her back, and every one who knows me may perceive and recognize in my appearance the loss which I suffered. But I ever lament the lost one. She is wanting everywhere. Nothing, nothing can take her place to me, and I would willingly give everything I possess and every joy and happiness that is prepared for me to once again call her mine, to once more live through that beautiful, fleeting time, during which alone I was happy."

Gaston ceased, and stared fixedly into the dying fire, and fell to the characteristic, slow rubbing of his emaciated hands.

"What is the name of this wonderful being?" asked the countess.

"My youth," answered Gaston, without turning his eyes from the fire.—From the German For Short Stories.

Chinese Money.

It is held by some that the coinage of China was invented especially for the confusion of the foreigner. At any rate, two market villages 20 miles apart are quite certain to have a different rate of exchange, and—but this may be only a coincidence—the foreigner is not the one who profits thereby. Thus, suppose you tender $1 at Stone Umbrella mart, and after much weighing and testing thereof are given in exchange 1,030 brass coins strung on a string, of varying weight and thickness.

Arrived at the Plain of Peace, you buy $1 worth of fowls, and put down your 1,030 coins, only to be told that the exchange is 1,160, and you have to find the balance. Next day, having invested all your savings in cash, you return to Stone Umbrella, intending to buy up all the silver in circulation at the lower rate of exchange.

Alas, for your hopes! You are met with a chilling, "These cash are ten parts—i. e., 100 per cent—worthless," and in corroboration of his statement your would be victim points out, or pretends to point out, the absence of certain blurs on the horrid little rings of brass.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Brazilian Morning Glory.

The Brazilian morning glory will prove a pleasant surprise to those who have not yet grown it. It is as easy of cultivation as the old fashioned morning glory. Its flowers are rose colored and very large, while its leaves are often 9 and 10 inches across. It makes a beautiful screen for a window or piazza.

HIS DETECTIVE WORK

STORY OF HOW RICHARD VAUX RAN DOWN A FAMOUS COUNTERFEITER.

Colonel Monroe Edwards' Threat to Kill the Recorder, Which Was Not Carried Out—A Noted Duel Which Grew Out of the Trial—Evarts Was In the Case.

Richard Vaux was not only famous as a jurist and statesman, but over half a century ago achieved widespread fame as a detective in the case of Colonel Monroe Edwards in Philadelphia, in October, 1841. Edwards, who was a native of Russellville, Ky., astounded the world by the boldness and success of his operations as a forger, his last offense realizing $44,000, which was secured by a series of forged letters and cotton warehouse receipts.

Judge Loundes, a famous criminal lawyer, was engaged to hunt down the culprit. He was located in Philadelphia, and Richard Vaux, then recorder of the city, by shrewd detective work, discovered the forger's stopping place. On going to the house the recorder rang the bell, leaving Judge Loundes and Mr. Hart a little to one side from the door. A servant girl answered to the bell.

"I want to see Colonel Monroe Edwards," said the recorder. "Is he in?"

She replied that he was, and Mr. Vaux immediately walked into the parlor. Between the parlor and the back room there was a door, and it was evident from the rattle of the knives and forks that those within the other apartment were engaged in a meal. There was no one in the parlor, and the girl went through the door and said something. A moment later a fine looking man came into the parlor. He was about 5 feet 9 inches in height, admirably proportioned, with hair as black as the raven's wing and dark eyes that shot a piercing glance from under dark eyebrows. He was dressed with scrupulous exactness and wore a large amount of fine jewelry, evidently paying a great deal of attention to his personal appearance. The recorder approached him and said:

"Good evening, Colonel Monroe Edwards. I believe you are Colonel Monroe Edwards, if I recollect aright?"

"I am that person," was the reply, "and am very glad to see you."

The identity ascertained, the recorder gave the preconcerted signal, and Judge Loundes, Mr. Hart, Captain Young and the police entered the room. Mr. Vaux directed Captain Young to put the handcuffs on Edwards, which was done. The prisoner made no remarks of any kind, and said not a word. The recorder, having completed his duties in the affair, was about to leave the room, when a very agile, slim, light colored mulatto boy of about 16 years rushed at the official with a long knife in his hand, and made a lunge at him with the weapon. So quick was the movement that there was nothing for the recorder to do but knock his assailant down and take the knife from him, which he did. Two or three persons, probably boarders, came into the room at that moment, and the mulatto disappeared, and was never afterward seen in this city, though "he" was afterward found to be a woman who traveled with Edwards in male attire.

The forger's trunks were secured, and Recorder Vaux gathered the evidence with peculiar detective ability.

The trial came off in the city of New York before Judge William Kent, a son of Chancellor Kent. Thomas Francis Marshall of Kentucky, Mr. Edmunds and a young gentleman named Evarts were counsel for the accused. Mr. Vaux, in recognition of the judicial functions of his office, was invited to take a seat beside the judge on the bench. The appearance and demeanor of the young lawyer named Evarts attracting his attention, he said to Judge Kent, "Who is that young gentleman?"

"His name is Evarts," replied the judge, "and I think he has the making of a lawyer in him."

It was the famous William M. Evarts, since then admittedly at the head of the American bar.

Edwards was convicted and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, mainly upon the testimony of Recorder Vaux. At the close of the trial the prisoner, with studied politeness, looked Mr. Vaux piercingly in the eyes. "I am glad to have this opportunity of speaking to you," he said. "I want to say one thing to you that is important for you to remember. I am going to kill you the moment I come out of Sing Sing. I give you this notice as from one gentleman to another."

"I am very thankful to you, Colonel Edwards," replied the recorder, with the same politeness, "for giving me this timely notice. It is very gentlemanly of you to do so. I will give you the opportunity at any time you desire. I have only done my duty and am prepared to take the consequences. I only ask of you that when you make the attempt you will look me in the face."

As Mr. Vaux said these words he gazed fixedly into the forger's face. The man turned white and trembled, for he read in his captor's countenance the justifiable determination to kill him should he ever dare to face him after his release. Not another word was spoken between them, for at that moment the officers led the prisoner away. He never attempted to carry his threat into effect, for he died in prison in January, 1847.

As a sequel to the trial came the duel between Tom Marshall and Colonel James Watson Webb. Marshall was a member of congress at the time of the Edwards trial, and for defending the brilliant criminal at the same time that he was a representative of the American people in Washington he was severely criticised by Colonel James Watson Webb in the columns of the New York Courier and Enquirer, of which journal that gentleman was the editor. In his address to the jury Marshall answered the newspaper criticism in that bitter style of invective of which he was the master. This led to a challenge and a meeting on the so called "field of honor." The congressman shot the famous editor in the knee and lamed him for life.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Taking No Chances.

George Harris, the negro who assaulted a young man at Uniontown because the latter had called him an "artist" and "aristocrat," is described as a civil, inoffensive fellow, who would not have committed the act had he been able to find a dictionary to learn the meaning of the words. No such book was handy, however, and Harris did not propose to take any chances and made a vicious attack on the young man with a hatchet.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The James river was named after James II. At the first English settlement it was called "the river of the Holy Ghost." The Indians called it Pawathanne, "the river of life."

There is no beautifier of complexion or form or behavior like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us.—Anon

CAN OPEN ANY SAFE.

An Expert Says He Can Do It In Three Hours With a Satchel Outfit.

One of the most expert "safe blowers" in this country, or any other, for that matter, is William C. Clark, now a resident of Chicago. Some foolish friends of Mr. Clark have been claiming that he is the only man who knows anything about blowing open a safe, a statement which Mr. Clark himself promptly refuted in conversation with a reporter.

"How did you gain your experience in opening safes?" was asked.

"Legitimately," answered Mr. Clark, smiling. "When a boy I learned the machinist trade in the Providence locomotive works. When about 21 years old I entered the service of my present employer. For three years I was with Professor Charles E. Munroe of Columbian university, Washington. He was the expert on explosives selected by the commission appointed by act of congress in 1890 to determine by actual tests of safes of various manufactures what would be best for the proposed government safes and vaults. These experiments, lasting three years, were conducted at Newport, R. I. Lieutenant Rodman was appointed by the government to assist Professor Munroe, and I assisted in every test that was made."

"How do you proceed to force open a safe?"

"If the idea is to do it quickly, I usually bore a four inch hole in the safe—that is, a hole four inches in diameter. Then a little nitroglycerin does the rest."

"How can you drill such a hole in a hardened steel safe?"

"With a compound blowpipe in 12 minutes I can heat redhot a spot six inches in diameter. This draws the temper of the steel and leaves it as soft and easy to cut as iron. Then with a 'cathead' drill we cut a groove an eighth of an inch wide around a spot four or even six inches in diamater. I once cut a four inch hole through a steel vault door 3½ inches thick in the Mercantile National bank of New York in 1 hour and 58 minutes."

"What tools do you use?"

"In addition to the blowpipe and drill I have a small pocket battery, a coil of insulated wire with detonators, a few wedges, a hammer and a half pint flask of nitroglycerin mixed with alcohol. I carry the entire outfit in a small satchel."

"Do you always use nitroglycerin?"

"Yes, it is the best explosive for many reasons. Put in a bottle with some alcohol it cannot possibly be exploded, yet in five minutes' time it can be made ready for use. All that is necessary is to pour water in the bottle. The alcohol unites with it and the nitroglycerin settles to the bottom. It doesn't make any report to speak of; it can be introduced where nothing else could and it always does the work."

"How much is required?"

"From two or three drops to half an ounce for each explosion, depending entirely upon circumstances. Burglars always use too much. The most nitroglycerin I ever used on a safe, and I've opened hundreds of them, was four and eight-tenths ounces. I have opened every known make of safe, except one, and will wager any reasonable amount that there is no safe made that I cannot open within three hours, without injury to the contents."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Metal and Vibrations.

An interesting discussion has for some time been going on as to whether repeated vibrations of iron and steel change the molecular structure and produce rupture of those metals. Some of the most experienced metallurgists are of the opinion that a fracture caused by repeated strains is the result of a change in the structure, and particularly that fibrous wrought iron is transformed into granular under continuous shocks, while others regard such an opinion as entirely erroneous. Numerous experiments instituted by so practical an operator as Badehinger of Munich, in which bars of iron and steel were submitted to repeated shocks, lead him to the conclusion that strains of iron and steel repeated frequently, millions of times, bring about no change of structure. Reference is also made to certain experiments by which a bar of wrought iron was made to show in two fractures only a few inches apart two distinct sources of fracture, the one sharply crystalline, the other fibrous, dependent simply upon whether the breaking force was a sharp blow or a slowly applied load. Another authority points out that crystalline appearance on the fracture is caused by the manner of breaking—that is, transversely broken fibers show granular crystalline faces; but, when pulled apart longitudinally, the same iron will show a fibrous structure. Again the iron in a bar may be crystalline at one point and fibrous at another.

A Dog's Grief For Its Master.

I think the most pathetic thing that has come under my notice occurred when I was in the ticket office of the Grand Trunk. It was there that one of my nearest and dearest friends until his sudden death was passenger agent. When I went to inquire the particulars of Phil Slater's death, his dog came rushing in, hunted every corner of the building for him and was out like a flash. Within 15 minutes that poor broken hearted animal was there thrice and would pay no attention to any hand nor oice while his master could not be found, and at the sad home on Gerrard street nothing but violence could restrain that faithful animal from lying beneath the coffin or prevent him, with his paws on the black box, from whining mournfully for the word of recognition that he would never hear again.

Of the great army of friends that Phil Slater had in this city and all over the province—and there never was a bigger hearted, more generous or kindly man—how many of us will remember him or mourn for him as incessantly and with such whole heartedness as that poor broken hearted dog?—Toronto Star.

A New Woman's Clerk.

An incident in the life of an ultra new woman: A Mrs. Beauclerk, stockbroker, testified in a London court that she had for a time employed her husband as a clerk in her office, but had dismissed him because of his persistence in lounging about her private adytum, which robbed that apartment of businesslikeness and dignity. Whenever she went out, she would lock this door. "I happen to be the more intelligent and money talented member of our domestic firm. Why may not I govern my office after my own methods?" she asked the solicitor general. "Fancy a man's typewriter growing derelict of duty and taking privileges simply because she is his wife. Hum! I engage and dismiss my clerks in consideration of merit!"

The Irish moss of commerce comes mostly from the west coast of Ireland; hence the name. It is also found extensively along the coasts of Newfoundland, Labrador and New England.

Water gas was first successfully employed in metallurgy in 1890.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

BURMESE GIRLS AND BOYS.

They Live In a Land of Sunshine and Are Merry All Day Long.

You can find Burma very easily by consulting your school geography if you don't know exactly where it is located. Finding the map of India, you will notice that this strange, interesting country is bordered on one side by the Chinese lands and on the other by the country of the Hindoos. The thing that will most interest young readers is the fact that the Burmese children are among the happiest youngsters of earth.

They live in a gorgeous country, and their mothers are held in great respect, which is not always the case with the various races of old India. Some of the little Burmese girls are very pretty and very graceful. They are fond of many trinkets, and though shy in their manner they easily become acquainted with strangers when the latter are lavish enough in their gifts of pretty things.

All Burmese boys are educated in the Buddhist monasteries, but it has not hitherto been thought necessary to teach the girls more than to read and write. To be pretty, to be religious, to be amiable and gay hearted and to have a good business instinct is all that is demanded of a girl in Burma. Presently, when she comes to learn the advantages which education confers in dealing with the foreigner, she will doubtless demand it as her right. To be pretty and to charm is her aim, and few things human are more charming than a group of Burmese girls going up to the pagoda to worship at a festival. With her rainbow tinted silk tamein fastened tightly round her slender figure, her spotlessly clean short jacket modestly covering the bosom and with her abundant black tresses smoothly coiled on to the top of her head, in the braids of which sweet smelling flowers are stuck, the Burmese girl knows full well she is an object to be admired. Perfectly well pleased with herself and contented with her world as it is, she gayly laughs and chats with her companions.

BURMESE BOY AND GIRL.

Ah, yes, Burma is a happy land, and its people are all gay and honest and sober, and the sunlight is warm and strong in their land, even as their bodies are strong and their hearts warm.—New York Recorder.

The Slate's Complaint.

The schoolroom was very quiet, for all the children had gone home. The sun had set some time before, and there was only a faint light in the room. A reading book and a slate lay on Harry's desk. He had forgotten to put them away.

All at once the reading book said: "Well, slate, if I couldn't spell any better than you can, I would try hard to learn. Now, you never saw a misspelled word on my pages, but I see three words spelled wrong on you."

"I can't help it, reader," said the poor slate. "It is no fault of mine. You see, that careless little Harry does make me spell so that I really feel ashamed of myself. A little while ago Mary White had me, and she only made me spell one word wrong all the time she kept me. And then you ought to see the answers Harry makes me give to the examples he has to do in arithmetic! Oh, dear! I do wish the teacher would give me back to Mary White!"—Woman's Journal.

Blanket Street.

Oh, come with me, baby, to Blanket street,
'Tis a famous place, dear, for tired feet.
Up Stairway hill, across Landing Ridge.
Past Bannister lane and then "Kissing bridge,"
Where somebody always you're sure to meet.

Over the bridges and at last we are there,
Right in the middle of Little Crib square.
The street is as white as the driven snow,
But warm like the blossom time snow, you know—
Warm to toes that are soft and pink and bare.

And, speaking of toes, 'tis in Blanket street
That the five little pigs so often meet,
And the littlest always goes squeak, squeak, squeak,
Though the weather is never cold and bleak—
For 'tis always summer in Blanket street.

And the yellow bird talks as well as sings,
And the bumblebee hums, but never stings,
And the love lamps burn like stars all night.
Oh, come, and be sure to listen right,
For the Blanket street birds say wonderful things.
—May D. Hatch in Once a Week.

Funny Definitions.

In a recent examination some boys were asked to define certain words and to give a sentence illustrating the meaning. Here are a few: Frantic means wild; I picked some frantic flowers. Athletic, strong; the vinegar was too athletic to use. Tandem, one behind another; the boys sit tandem at school. And then some single words are funnily explained. Dust is mud with the wet squeezed out; fins are fishes' wings; stars are the moon's eggs; circumference is distance around the middle of the outside.—Education Gazette.

Doubtful.

"I have kinder had my doubts," said Mr. Jason as he removed his Sunday best suit after his visit to the city, "I kinder have my doubts whether Brother Bill's son tuk me around and showed me the town, or whether he showed the town me."—Indianapolis Journal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24 ..... 1896

Are we becoming too highly educated? The professions are more than overcrowded, yet the dental, medical and law colleges are yearly turning out hundreds of graduates, who hope and expect to make their learning bring them a living for themselves and, eventually, their families. Manager Vining reports that he has one-hundred professional men on the payroll of the cable car system, who are glad to hold a gripman's position. Three longshoremen are attorneys, an elevator man is a dentist and two freight clerks are doctors. Excepting for the educational advantages which they have enjoyed, it would seem that the possession of a sheepskin is something of a luxury nowadays. At all events, it avails them nothing in a struggle for a living. It has always been our opinion that we have too few tillers of the soil among us. Surely something is radically wrong when, in a land of plenty and on a soil that responds as California soil does with so much bounty for so little labor, there is starvation within our borders. But here again is an obstacle. Land is so high in price that it is well-nigh impossible for young man to gain possession of a section large enough to yield him competence. Thousands upon thousands of acres in California have been bought and are now held at top-notch prices by wealthy men and grasping corporations. It is only the rich who can afford to farm. We have been so long without a competing railroad that freight rates have gradually undermined the farmers' prosperity, until now, in many a fertile valley and on many a sunny slope, cereals and fruits are wasting, unharvested and unpicked. The farmer and the orchardist cannot afford to ship their produce. Oh, there would be plenty and to spare, if things were only adjusted as they should be. We would have fewer slaves in this city of ours, and happier men. Would that these one-hundred "professionals," who work by the hour to earn the bare necessities of life, were the owners of one hundred cosy homes in the country. They would be infinitely better off. And we dare say that those misfit longshoremen would gladly exchange their environment for "green fields and pastures new"—if they could.—[S F, Town Talk.

Imagine that you own a small ranch of one hundred acres, and you have a neighbor who has one of a thousand acres running his plow two or three furrows into your land each year. Would you not enter a protest? And being weak in your possessions, would you not ask protection from some of your stronger neighbors by demanding arbitration? That is about the way the matter stands between England and Venezuela. England sees some rich mines or some stragetic point in Venezuela which she craves and wants a slice in order to obtain what she wants, and Uncle Sam does not believe she ought to have it. She is going out of her range in her avarice, and trying to plow American soil, and that is why President Cleveland asks Congress to appoint a commissioner to look into the matter. We do not want a war with England, but we do want to know if she is poaching on American soil, and there is one thing which England must not forget, and that is, that, no matter how much the people of the United States may punch at each other and pull hair in the regulation of their domestic affairs, when it comes to patriotic devotion to the great principles of the republic, they are all one, and will not allow any foolishness.

According to a dispatch from Helena, Montana, an astute attorney of that place has discovered that the law requiring the annual expenditure of $100 in work or improvement on unpatented mining claims is unconstitutional. The dispatch concludes as follows: "This prominent attorney stands ready to dispute the claims of those he advised not to do the statutory development work, and he says he will fight the matter through every court in the land until the Supreme Court of the United States in Washington is reached. He has made long and careful search in this particular case, and evidently knows what he is talking about, although he refuses to make known the grounds for his assertion." The result will be that long before he gets to the Supreme Court his unfortunate clients will regret having put any trust in such assumption, which only needs notice to be contemned and does not deserve serious comment.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o'clock, a. m., on Thursday, April 9, 1896, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County for the term of one year beginning May 10, 1896, and ending May 9, 1897.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sick properly admitted to contracter's care, on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contract.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed, "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said Ninth day of April, 1896, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

The Storm

The long dry spell which almost unbroken since the middle of October, was broken on the 16th in a general rainstorm extending from British Columbia to the Gulf of California, and inland over Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Utah, Nevada and California. The storm was first reported by the Weather Bureau on the 11th, when an area of low pressure was observed off the northen California coast, held in check by an area of high pressure over Idaho and Montana. This produced rain over Northern California as far south as San Francisco on the coast, and Sacramento in the interior, with cloudy skies elsewhere. By the 15th the storm had become general along the western slope of the Sierras, and it beat its way across the mountains giving Inyo County a drenching rain on the 18th when seventy-one-hundredth of an inch fell at Independence. On the 19th no rain fell. On Monday, the 20th, however, a copious rain set in and continued throughout the entire day, giving us 1.62 inch for the storm, with heavy snow in the Sierras, thus insuring an abundance of water for irrigation next Summer For a midwinter storm it was remarkable for its warmth and gentle wind. The weather Bureau officer, Mr. Wilkinson reports as follows: Highest temperature for the week 63°, lowest 33° and mean temperature 46. A longer period of cloudy weather has scarcely been seen in this section. There was only 19.9 hours of sunshine during the week. As a result of the storm every one wears a brighter face and predicts better times next summer.

Dips, Spurs And Angles From Southern Inyo.

This section of the country received a good wetting this week. The roads are in good condition now and at least three regular ore teams are making trips between Darwin, Modock, Lucky Jim and Keeler. The rainfall for this week's storm was at least half an inch.

Jerry Mairs of Independence has been in Keeler for over a week and went to Independence again on Tuesday's train.

R. Penaluna of Modock and also Jas. Woods are in town. Mr. Penaluna is enroute to Lone Pine to see the doctor.

Rafael Diaz and Abe Diaz of Lone Pine are in Keeler. Their aunt, Mrs. M. Diaz died very suddenly last week from a paralytic stroke. The funeral was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

Johnny Davies of Georges Creek is in town and will go to-morrow.

Mr. John Shepherd and wife drove down in a buggy from Georges Creek Tuesday and returned home again Wednesday. Mr. Shepherd has sold three car loads of number one hay in and around this vicinity in the last two weeks and says he has plenty more on hand.

Harry Locket left on Tuesday's train for San Francisco, where he expects to have an operation performed on his arm, which has been bothering him very much of late.

Jeff Riggs, the teamster, who drives Boland's ore wagon, is on the sick list. He has a slight touch of pneumonia.

An Indian came in one day last week from Saline and showed some very fine and rich specimens of silver ore. He said he found a ledge about sixteen inches wide of it. Some parties have gone out to look at it and if it is as the Indian says, they will locate several claims.

C. L. Meyers Jr., of Big Pine is visiting with J. Fielman and family.

Rube Spear and his brother, of Lone Pine have struck a good sized lead and silver ledge near Swansea. They will soon have a shipment.

Gregory Kelly of Cerro Gordo is in Keeler at present.

The Lake View hotel has changed hands and Dave Holland of Lone Pine has leased it. It opened Monday morning under the management.

M. Bestandig, representative for Louis Taussig & Co., San Francisco, was among the arrivals at Keeler on Wednesday's train. He takes team at Lone Pine Thursday and will visit all the towns on the west side.

Mr. F. McIver of Citrus, made a flying trip to Keeler Wednesday evening, returning Thursday morning.

Yours Truly.
INDEPENDENT.

Mention

Last Saturday we were plunged into the deepest grief. Even nature, who had smiled upon us and favored us with the brightest sunshine for a month past, wore a clouded face and wept in sympathy with us. In short, we are very much disappointed that the Post Office Department will not accept "Modena" as our name on account of it being too near like "Madera." We emphatically rebel, but we cant help it. We must rechristen our new town before we can hope for recognition from Uncle Sam. In the mean time we are still here, and are just as lively and healthy as any infant city that exists.

Mr. James Jenkins of Georges Creek has rented what is known as the Tibbets ranch and will move among us in the near future.

Mr. Luke Smith is on a business trip to Fixley, Tulare County. He was accompanied a part of the way by Frank Lovet and Wm. Blackburn, who will visit their former home in Los Angles Co.

Mr. G. D. Calvert is acting as mail carrier during the absence of Mr. Smith.

In last week's items we made a misstatement as to the time of the next dance at Mr. Neil's building. It is to be on Friday night, January 31st. Good music has been engaged and all who come are insured a good time. Supper will be served at fifty cents a plate. Come one come all and bring some one with you.

Questions

DARWIN, Jan. 20, 1896.

EDITOR INYO INDEPENDENT—A private letter received here conveyed information that John Hughes died at the County Hospital.

I have locked in vain for some notice of the event in the county papers.

Did not the Board of Supervisors of this county make an order that the County Physician furnish THE INDEPENDENT notice of all deaths at that institution? Does not the official power of influence of that representive body extend further than letting "contracts?"

Does not the law of the State of California require official record of all births and deaths? Even so, and if the matter is buried in red tape, how will John Hughes' relatives in the State of New York ever know how, where or when he died?

He was deposited in the potter's field, instanter, without the knowledge of his fellow pioneers.

Once years ago in your town John Hughes nursed a stricken stranger and individually paid doctor bill and entire funeral expenses. Whatever his station in life, of such was the disposition of John Hughes.

How are we toilers and money-producers down this way to know the fate of those worn out and dead?

Yours, D.

It is reported that there will be some horse-racing and other sport and a grand ball at Big Pine on Washington's Birthday. Speak up, gentlemen; let us know something about it.

Harmon Hankhammer removed his household Lares and Penates to Big Pine to-day. A wedding is now in order.

Charley Summers of Bishop spent a couple of days in town this week.

Superintendent's Opinion.

LONE PINE, Jan. 21, 1896.

Editor of the INDEPENDENT:—

In view of the recent trouble at Milton School District the following official opinions of the State Sup't Public Instruction in regard to corporal punishment will be found apropos.

"Opinion 872. There is in the School Law nothing to prohibit corporal punishment in the schools. Expulsion and suspension are not the only means of securing good order. Of course, corporial punishment should be resorted to only in extreme cases, and it should be administered with great discretion. The schools would fail of fulfilling their most important mission if the only way of meeting the cases of those boys who most need controlling and restraining was to turn them loose upon the streets, free from all control and restraint."

"Opinion 873. A teacher has the right to inflict reasonable corporal punishment upon disobedient or refractory pupils."

Opinion "874. It has always been held by the courts that teachers have a perfect right to administer reasonable corporal punishment. Of course, if there is a rule of the Board of Education or of the Board of Trustees to the effect that corporal punishment shall not be employed in any case, teachers should comply with such rule. A rule abolishing corporal punishment would not be in contravention of our law; hence trustees have a right to adopt such a rule if they think proper to do so. I am of the opinion that the adoption of such a rule would be unwise, for I think the time has not yet come when the ill-controlled children of ill-controlled parents can be governed by any means better than judicious corporal punishment."

These opinions are from the highest authorities on school matters in the state. I hope you will publish them, as a clear understanding of the rights and duties of a public school teacher on this vexatious question may prevent future misunderstandings.

Respectfully
S. V. AUSTIN,
County Sup't.

Copper.

Every new development of electricity adds to the demand for copper, but it is only of late that in telegraphy a very large use has been found for the metal, as the majority of the circuits hitherto have been of iron wire. An instance of a new demand for the metal which had hitherto been largely suspected is found in the last report of the Western Union Telegraph Company. It is there stated that the company, during the year ending June, 1895, added to its wire lines a net length of 11,850 miles, and that over 11,000 miles of the new wire is copper. Further, the company has adopted the policy of replacing all defective iron wires with copper, the intention being to use that metal alone on all the principal lines hereafter. The advantages of saving in weight, increased capacity for electrical transmission and diminished liability to interruption from atmospheric conditions, are sufficient to make the copper wires more economical in the end, notwithstanding their greater first cost. The decision has been assisted, also, by the fact that the improvements in processes for drawing copper wire has enabled makers to furnish material well adapted for telegraphic use. The size of copper used for telegraph lines is generally No. 9 or 10 B. and S., weighing about 100 pounds to the mile. This would require, for 10,000 miles, about 760 long tons of copper—an amount not so important in itself, but as indicating a tendency to increase demand—Scientific Press.

Low Grade Ores

A recent dispatch from Denver, Col., to the Enterprise, says: An invention of for the treatment of the low grade ore of Cripple Creek and other telluride camps has just been successfully demonstrated on a large scale by its inventors, H. R. Cassel and B. C. Heinemann of New York. A fifty ton mill has been erected at Boulder by a few New York capitalists to test the process, and an extremely high extraction has been obtained from $8 ores. The mill is now in operation day and night, and the process will open up immense fields of low grade telluride hitherto considered untreatable. The inventors use bromide, but recover it continuously at extremely low figures. Mr. Cassel is the inventor of the well known metallurgic and cyanide processes, and is also the originator of the Cassel gold extraction company of Glasgow, to whose process is due the immense development of the South African gold fields.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, Do Ordain As Follows:

SECTION 1. Every person engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the County of Inyo, State of California, must annually, in advance, procure a license therefor from the Tax-Collector of said Inyo County, and must make therefor the following payment:

1. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control five thousand sheep or more shall constitute the first class, and must pay One Hundred and twenty-five dollars per annum for the first five thousand sheep, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of dollars and fifty cents per annum.

2. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control four thousand sheep and less than five thousand constitute the second class, and must pay One Hundred dollars per annum for the first four thousand, and for each additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

3. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control three thousand five hundred sheep and less than four thousand constitute the third class, and must pay eighty-seven dollars and fifty cents for the first three thousand five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

4. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control three thousand sheep and less than three thousand five hundred constitute the fourth class, and must pay seventy-five dollars per annum for the first three thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

5. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control two thousand five hundred sheep and less than three thousand constitute the fifth class and must pay sixty-two dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first two thousand five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

6. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control two thousand sheep and less than two thousand five hundred constitute the sixth class, and must pay fifty dollars per annum for the first two thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

7. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control one thousand five hundred sheep and less than two thousand constitute the seventh class, and must pay thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first one thousand five hundred and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

8. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control one thousand sheep and less than one thousand five hundred constitute the eighth class, and must pay twenty-five dollars per annum for the first one thousand, and for every additional hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

9. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control five hundred sheep and less than one thousand constitute the ninth class and must pay twelve dollars and fifty cents per annum for the first five hundred, and for every additional hundred sheep, the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

10. Those owning or having in their possession and under their control a less number than five hundred sheep constitute the tenth class, and must pay, for every one hundred sheep the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per annum.

SECTION 2. The license provided for by this ordinance shall be deemed a debt due to the said County of Inyo, and the Tax Collector of the said Inyo County shall have the collection of said license, and it is hereby made his duty to collect the same, and against every person required to take out a license under the provisions of this ordinance, who fails or neglects or refuses to take out such license, the said Tax-collector may direct suit to be brought in the name of the said County of Inyo as plaintiff, for the recovery of said license, and in such case either the Tax-Collector or the attorney for the said plaintiff in said suit, may make the necessary affidavit for, and a writ of attachment may issue without any bond being given on behalf of the plaintiff, and in case of recovery by the said plaintiff, fifty dollars damages must be added to the judgment and costs, to be collected from the defendant.

SECTION 3. The County Auditor of said Inyo County shall prepare and have printed, suitable blank licenses for the said Tax Collector to carry out the provisions of this ordinance, with a blank receipt attached, for the signature of the Tax-Collector when sold.

SECTION 4. The Tax Collector shall collect a fee of one dollar for each license sold, which shall be paid into the Salary Fund of the said Inyo County.

SECTION 5. Every person, firm, or corporation, engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the said County of Inyo, before procuring the license in this ordinance provided, must make and file with the said Tax Collector his, their, or its affidavit made on behalf of a firm, to be made by a member thereof, and if on behalf of a corporation, to be made by any person on its behalf; which affidavit must state his place of residence, or if a firm, its place of business firm name, and the residence of the members thereof, and if a corporation, its corporate name, its name, principal place of business, and the name of the state or nation under the laws of which the same has been formed; that he, or they, or it is engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep, (or as the case may be,) in the County of Inyo, State of California; the number of sheep of which he, they, or it is the owner, or possessed and controls, in the said County of Inyo, and the mark or marks, brand or brands, on said sheep.

SECTION 6. Should any person, firm or corporation fail, neglect, or refuse to file with the Tax-Collector the affidavit mentioned in section 5 of this ordinance, or should the said affidavit, in the opinion of the Tax Collector, fail to truly state the number of sheep of which he, they, or it is the owner, or possessed, and under his, their, or its control, in said County of Inyo, it shall be the duty of said Tax Collector to corrall, and carefully count and estimate said sheep.

SECTION 7. Each license issued under the provisions of this ordinance shall be in force and of virtue from and including the first day of April of the year in which the same shall be procured, until and including the thirty first day of March of the following year.

SECTION 8. All moneys collected for licenses under the provisions of this ordinance shall be paid over to the County Treasurer of said Inyo County as other moneys, and shall be placed to the credit of the Salary fund of said County.

SECTION 9. This Ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and Ordinance No. 51 of said Board of Supervisors passed on the 5th day of January, 1894 is hereby repealed, and all ordinances and parts of Ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith are each and all of them hereby repealed.

SECTION 10. This Ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR," "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE," ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

CHAPTER I.

It appeared that Armour had made the great mistake of his life. When people came to know, they said that to have done it when sober had shown him possessed of a kind of maliciousness and cynicism almost pardonable, but to do it when tipsy proved him merely weak and foolish. But the fact is he was less tipsy at the time than was imagined, and he could have answered to more malice and cynicism than were credited to him. To those who know the world it is not singular that of the two Armour was thought to have made the mistake and had the misfortune or that people wasted their pity and their scorn upon him alone. Apparently they did not see that the woman was to be pitied. He had married her, and she was only an Indian girl from Fort Charles of the Hudson's Bay company, with a little honest white blood in her veins. Nobody, not even her own people, felt that she had anything at stake or was in danger of unhappiness or was other than a person who had ludicrously come to bear the name of Mrs. Francis Armour. If any one had said in justification that she loved the man, the answer would have been that plenty of Indian women had loved white men, but had not married them, and yet the population of half breeds went on increasing.

Frank Armour had been a popular man in London. His club might be found in the vicinity of Pall Mall, his father's name was high and honored in the army list, one of his brothers had served with Wolseley in Africa, and himself, having no profession, but with a taste for business and investment, had gone to Canada with some such intention as Lord Selkirk's in the early part of the century. He owned large shares in the Hudson's Bay company, and when he traveled through the northwest country prospecting he was received most hospitably.

Of an inquiring and gregarious turn of mind, he went as much among the half breeds—or metis, as they are called—and Indians as among the officers of the Hudson's Bay company and the white settlers. He had ever been credited with having a philosophical turn, and this was accompanied by a certain strain of impulsiveness or daring. He had been accustomed all his life to make up his mind quickly, and because he was well enough off to bear the consequences of momentary rashness in commercial investments he was not counted among the transgressors. He had his own fortune. He was not drawing upon a common purse. It was a different matter when he trafficked rashly in the family name, so far as to marry the daughter of Eye-of-the-Moon, the Indian chief.

He was tolerably happy when he went to the Hudson bay country, for Miss Julia Sherwood was his promised wife, and she, if poor, was notably beautiful and of good family. His people had not looked quite kindly on this engagement. They had indeed tried in many ways to prevent it, partly because of Miss Sherwood's poverty, and also because they knew that Lady Agnes Martling had long cared for him and was most happily endowed with wealth and good looks also. When he left for Canada, they were inwardly glad (they imagined that something might occur to end the engagement)—all except Richard, the wiseacre of the family, the bookman, the drone, who preferred living at Greyhope, their Hertfordshire home, the year through to spending half the time in Cavendish square. Richard was very fond of Frank, admiring him immensely for his buxom strength and cleverness and not a little, too, for that very rashness which had brought him such havoc at last.

Richard was not, as Frank used to say, "perfectly sound on his pins"—that is, he was slightly lame—but he was right at heart. He was an immense reader, but made little use of what he read. He had an abundant humor and remembered every anecdote he ever heard. He was kind to the poor, walked much, talked to himself as he walked and was known by the humble sort as "a 'centric." But he had a wise head, and he foresaw danger to Frank's happiness when he went away. While others had gossiped and maneuvered and were busily idle, he had watched things. He saw that Frank was dear to Julia in proportion to the distance between her and young Lord Haldwell, whose father had done something remarkable in guns or torpedoes and was rewarded with a lordship and an uncommonly large fortune. He also saw that after Frank left the distance between Lord Haldwell and Julia became distinctly less. They were both staying at Greyhope. Julia Sherwood was a remarkably clever girl. Though he felt it his duty to speak to her for his brother—a difficult and delicate matter—he thought it would come better from his mother.

But when he took action it was too late. Miss Sherwood naively declared that she had not known her own heart and that she did not care for Frank any more. She wept a little and was soothed by motherly Mrs. Armour, who was inwardly glad, though she knew the matter would cause Frank pain, and even General Armour could not help showing slight satisfaction, though he was innocent of any deliberate action to separate the two. Straightway Miss Sherwood dispatched a letter to the wilds of Canada, and for a week was an unengaged young person. But she was no doubt consoled by the fact that for some time past she had complete control of Lord Haldwell's emotions. At the end of the week her perceptions were justified by Lord Haldwell's proposal, which, with admirable tact and obvious demureness, was accepted.

Now Frank was wandering much in the wilds, so that his letters and papers went careering about after him, and some that came first were the last to reach him. That was how he received a newspaper announcing the marriage of Lord Haldwell and Julia Sherwood at the same time that her letter, written in estimable English and with admirable feeling, came, begging for a release from their engagement, and, toward its close, assuming, with a charming regret, that all was over, and that the last word had been said between them.

He was sitting in the trader's room at Fort Charles when the carrier came with the mails. He had had some successful days hunting buffalo with Eye-of-the-Moon and a little band of metis, had had a long powwow in Eye-of-the-Moon's lodge, had chatted gayly with Lali, the daughter, and was now prepared to enjoy heartily the arrears of correspondence and news before him. He ran his hand through the letters and papers, intending to classify them immediately, according to such handwriting as he recognized and the dates on the envelopes. But as he did so he saw a newspaper from which the wrapper was partly torn. He also saw a note in the margin directing him to a certain page. The note was in Richard's handwriting. He opened the paper at the page indicated and saw the account of the marriage. His teeth clinched on his cigar; his face turned white; the paper fell from his fingers. He gasped; his hands spread out nervously, then caught the table and held it as though to steady himself.

The trader rose. "You are ill," he said. "Have you bad news?" He glanced toward the paper.

Slowly Armour folded the paper up and then rose unsteadily. "Gordon," he said, "give me a glass of brandy." He turned toward the cupboard in the room. The trader opened it, took out a bottle and put it on the table beside Armour, together with a glass and some water. Armour poured out a stiff draft, added a very little water and drank it. He drew a great sigh and stood looking at the paper.

"Have you bad news?"

"Is there anything I can do for you, Mr. Armour?" urged the trader.

"Nothing, thank you, nothing at all. Just leave the brandy here, will you? I feel knocked about, and I have to go through the rest of these letters."

He ran his fingers through the pile, turning it over hastily, as if searching for something. The trader understood. He was a cool headed Scotsman. He knew that there were some things best not inquired into, and that men must have their bad hours alone. He glanced at the brandy debatingly, but presently turned and left the room in silence. In his own mind, however, he wished he might have taken the brandy without being discourteous. Armour had discovered Miss Sherwood's letter. Before he opened it he took a little more brandy. Then he sat down and read it deliberately. The liquor had steadied him. The fingers of one hand even drummed on the table. But the face was drawn, the eyes were hard, and the look of him was altogether pinched. After he had finished this he looked for others from the same hand. He found none. Then he picked out those from his mother and father. He read them grimly.

Once he paused as he read his mother's letter and took a great gulp of plain brandy. There was something very like a sneer on his face when he finished it. He read the hollowness of the sympathy extended to him. He understood the far from adroit references to Lady Agnes Martling. He was very bitter. He read no more letters, but took up The Morning Post again and read it slowly through. The look of his face was not pleasant. There was a small looking glass opposite him. He caught sight of himself in it. He drew his hand across his eyes and forehead, as though he was in a miserable dream. He looked again. He could not recognize himself.

He then bundled the letters and papers into his dispatch box. His attention was drawn to one letter. He picked it up. It was from Richard. He started to break the seal, but paused. The strain of the event was too much. He winced. He determined not to read it then, to wait until he had recovered himself. He laughed now painfully. It had been better for him—it had maybe averted what people used to term his tragedy—had he read his brother's letter at that moment, for Richard Armour was a sensible man, notwithstanding his peculiarities, and perhaps the most sensible words he ever wrote were in that letter thrust unceremoniously into Frank Armour's pocket.

Armour had received a terrible blow. He read his life backward. He had no future. The liquor he had drunk had not fevered him. It had not wildly excited him. It merely drew him up to a point where he could put a sudden impulse into practice without flinching. He was bitter against his people. He credited them with more interference than was actual. He felt that happiness had gone out of his life and left him hopeless. As we said, he was a man of quick decisions. He would have made a dashing but reckless soldier. He was not without the elements of the gamester. It is possible that there was in him also a strain of cruelty, undeveloped, but radical.

Life so far had developed the best in him. He had been cheery and candid. Now he traveled back into new avenues of his mind and found strange aboriginal passions fully adapted to the present situation. Vulgar anger and reproaches were not after his nature. He suddenly found sources of refined retaliation. He drew upon them. He would do something to humiliate his people and the girl who had spoiled his life. Some one thing! It would be absolute and lasting. It would show how low had fallen his opinion of women, of whom Julia Sherwood had once been chiefest to him. In that he would show his scorn of her. He would bring down the pride of his family, who, he believed, had helped out of mere selfishness to tumble his happiness into the shambles.

He was older by years than an hour ago. But he was not without the faculty of humor. That was why he did not become very excited; it was also why he determined upon a comedy which should have all the elements of tragedy. Perhaps, however, he had not carried his purposes to immediate conclusions were it not that the very gods seemed to play his game with him, for while he stood there looking out into the yard of the fort a Protestant missionary passed the window. The Protestant missionary, as he is found at such places as Fort Charles, is not a strictly superior person. A Jesuit might have been of advantage to Frank Armour at that moment. The Protestant missionary is not above comfortable assurances of gold. So that when Armour summoned this one in and told him what was required of him and slipped a generous gift of the queen's coin into his hand he smiled vaguely and was willing to do what he was bidden. Had he been a Jesuit, who is sworn to poverty and more often than not a man of birth and education, he might have influenced Frank Armour and prevented the notable mishap and scandal. As it was, Armour took more brandy.

Then he went down to Eye-of-the-Moon's lodge. A few hours afterward the missionary met him there. The next morning Lali, the daughter of Eye-of-the-Moon and the chieftainess of a portion of her father's tribe, whose grandfather had been a white man, was introduced to the Hudson bay country as Mrs Frank Armour. But that was not all. Indeed as it stood it was very little. He had only made his comedy possible as yet. Now the play itself was to come. He had carried his scheme through boldly so far. He would not flinch in carrying it out to the last letter. He brought his wife down to the great lakes immediately, scarcely resting night or day. There he engaged an ordinary but reliable woman, to whom he gave instructions, and sent the pair to the coast. He instructed his solicitor at Montreal to procure passages for Mrs. Francis Armour and maid for Liverpool. Then by letters he instructed his solicitor in London to meet Mrs. Francis Armour and maid at Liverpool and take them to Greyhope in Hertfordshire—that is, if General Armour and Mrs. Armour or some representative of the family did not meet them when they landed from the steamship.

Presently he sat down and wrote to his father and mother and asked them to meet his wife and her maid when they arrived by the steamer Aphrodite. He did not explain to them in precise detail his feelings on Miss Julia Sherwood's marriage, nor did he go into full particulars as to the personality of Mrs. Frank Armour, but he did say that because he knew they were anxious that he should marry "acceptably" he had married into aristocracy, the oldest aristocracy of America, and because he also knew they wished him to marry wealth he sent them a wife rich in virtues—native, unspoiled virtues.

Thirsty and He Liked Wine.

"Just open a small bottle!"

He was a tall, countrified looking man, who walked up to the bar in a Broadway saloon and gave the order. In one hand he carried a little black satchel.

The bartender learned his favorite brand and drawing the cork was about to pour the wine into a regulation glass.

"Not on your life," said the man, stretching forth his hand. "Get a big glass that will hold the pint."

This was done. The man dashed it off at a single gulp, smacking his lips and murmured, "That's pretty good." Then he opened the satchel, pulled out a roll of bills, from which he separated what he called a "five spot," and handed it over. When the bartender held out his change, the man said:

"Keep it and open another bottle."

And this man went through the operation until he had disposed of seven bottles, having been standing at the bar about half an hour and saying nothing more than was necessary to give his order. He then walked to a chair, placed his satchel on the seat and himself on top of that, and fell asleep. He awoke in 15 minutes, grabbed his satchel and shot through the door. No one in the saloon had ever seen him before, but the bartender would like to have him as a steady customer.—New York Herald.

A Good Reason For a Morning Nap.

It is claimed that one of the reasons for the undisturbed morning sleep, especially for children and delicate and nervous persons, is based on a well understood scientific theory. We are told that the vitality of humanity is at its lowest ebb between 2 and half past 3 in the morning. This being the case, it would naturally require some hours to restore the equilibrium. It is very easy to see that if the cares of the day are taken up before this is secured the individual would start in handicapped by a certain lack of force.

Where the rest continues uninterruptedly until the voluntary awakening it stands to reason that the system is in much better condition to perform its allotted task. So important to the well being of the individual is this little understood and scarcely appreciated quality that we call vitality that it is well worth while to see to it that every condition is made as favorable as possible. To this end undisturbed rest, with the best surroundings, is a thing to which a good deal more attention should be paid.—New York Ledger.

Ownership of Farms.

The statistics show that Ohio has the largest number of farms of any state in the Union, 256,264; Illinois comes second, 252,953; then Missouri, 250,832; Texas, 248,782; New York, 226,632; Pennsylvania, 211,472; Iowa, 205,435; Indiana, 205,831. No other state has more than 200,000. The percentage of ownership in farms is largest in the north and west, as is the percentage of homes also.

The angelica plant is native to Europe. It grows wild in most of the northern parts of that continent, being also found in the Alps, the Carpathian and the Ural mountains.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Marcus Daly will not race in England next year. Croker and Belmont may send their stables across the pond.

Peter Maher will have a reception at Madison Square Garden, New York, on December 28. He will meet three heavy-weights.

The report among trotting horsemen that M. E. McHenry had decided to retire from the turf is denied by the Freeport reinsmen.

Professor Enoth, a diver, recently stayed under water four minutes and eight seconds at Detroit. He claims this breaks all previous records.

Ladies are admitted free on Wednesdays at the Ingleside Race Track, San Francisco. Last Wednesday nearly 5000 of the fair sex passed through the gates.

The California Jockey Club open up at Bay District, San Francisco, on the 26th day of December, when Ed Smith, Secretary of the State Fair Association, will be installed as general manager.

President Williams of the Bay District states that $70,000 or $80,000 will be invested on the Oakland track in improvements during the next three months.

Before the Olympic Athletic Club, in Syracuse, N. Y., Wednesday night, Joe Dunfee, middle-weight, bested Billie Woods, the heavy-weight champion of Colorado. The men met in a six-round match.

There will be no more boxing matches between professionals in St. Louis. That is the edict given by Chief of Police Harigan in response to newspapers denouncing such contests as against the law.

Oarsmen are looking forward with much pleasure and interest to the rowing regatta which will be held on the Alameda estuary on February 22, under the auspices of the Alameda Boating and Swimming Club.

Mrs. D. A. Honig and Miss Hobart were presented with handsome bracelets by the management of the Ingleside Track last Wednesday for having successfully named the first two horses in the ladies' handicap that day.

Joe Vendig, late of the Florida Athletic Club, is authority for the statement that Fitzsimmons has at length agreed to box Maher for the worlds' championship in the neighborhood of El Paso, on February 14th next.

The manager of the San Francisco hand ball court will offer very handsome prizes to be competed for next Sunday by the champion players of the coast. It will be a Christmas tournament, and the entries will close on Saturday, the 21st inst.

Professor Kaarlus, in order to demonstrate who has the superior knowledge of angles, challenges any billiardist in America to play him a series of games known as the "Parisian corner game" (the four styles), for from $100 to $500 a side.

Captain Cumming writes that 100 yards of line is necessary to gamble on the landing of a Russian River steelhead. The fish average fifteen pounds in weight, and as the pools are long and deep, runs of sixty and seventy yards are of common occurrence.

It is said that Peppers and Spider Kelly went off by their "lonely" Monday night and had a set-to. The colored boy made a monkey out of "Spider" in about three rounds and won $350 for so doing. The mill occurred near the Cliff House, San Francisco.

The permanent suspension of Titus, Cabanne and Murphy by the Racing Board of the League of American Wheelmen has stirred cycling to its very centre in the East, owing to the prominence of the men and the severity of the punishment meted out to them.

The duck hunters have not been very successful during the past week. There are plenty of ducks here, but the ducks that have been here some time have become educated and do their traveling at night. The best reports come from the Suisun marsh. During the week some fair bags have been made at McGill's, on the Sonoma marsh.

No not One.

There is not a human being physically perfect. Much of this imperfection comes from heritage, much more froma ccident, neglect or ignorance. All of this mass of mortal suffering is manifest in aches and pains of more or less intensity, or in some kind of unnatural distress. Hence all strive for relief. The simplest and surest is of course the best, and true economy demands to have it always at hand. When we know that an ordinary sprain may make a cripple for life, we should seek the best remedy at once, and at once we know that it is found in a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil. Those who in any way doubt this can experiment and be sure of cure. Thousands have done so.

Close quarters—twenty-five cent pieces held by a miser.

Disastrous Failure.

We can mention no failure more disastrous than that of physical energy. It involves the partial suspension of the digestive and assimilative processes, and entails the retirement from business of the liver and kidneys. Only through the good offices of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can the restoration of its former vigorous status be hoped for. When this aid has been secured, a resumption of activity in the stomach, liver and bowels may be relied upon. The Bitters conquers malaria and kidney troubles.

The man carried away by enthusiasm is frequently brought back by disgust.

After Thirty Years.

THE BUCKEYE STATE CONTRIBUTES THE STORY OF A VETERAN'S SEARCH.

How Fred Taylor, a Member of the Gallant 189th N. Y., V. I., Finally Found What He Has Sought Since the War Closed.

(From the Ashtabula, Ohio, Beacon.)

Mr. Fred Taylor was born and brought up near Elmira, N. Y. and from there enlisted in the 189th regiment, N. Y., V. I., with which he went through the war, and saw much hard service. Owing to exposure and hardships during the service, Mr. Taylor contracted chronic diarrhœa from which he has suffered now over 30 years, with absolutely no help from physicians. By nature he was a wonderfully vigorous man. Had he not been, his disease and the experiments of the doctors would have killed him long ago. Laudanum was the only thing which afforded him relief. He had terrible headaches, his nerves were shattered, he could not sleep an hour a day on an average, and he was reduced to a skeleton. A year ago, he and his wife sought relief in a change of climate and removed to Geneva, Ohio; but the change in health came not. Finally on the recommendation of F. J. Hoffner, the leading druggist of Geneva, who was cognizant of similar cases which Pink Pills had cured, Mr. Taylor was persuaded to try a box. "As a drowning man grasps a straw so I took the pills," says Mr. Taylor, "but with no more hope of rescue. But after thirty years of suffering and fruitless search for relief I at last found it in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The day after I took the first pills I commenced to feel better and when I had taken the first box I was in fact a new man." That was two months ago. Mr. Taylor has since taken more of the pills and his progress is steady and he has the utmost confidence in them. He has regained full control of his nerves and sleeps as well as in his youth. Color is coming back to his parched veins and he is gaining flesh and strength rapidly. He is now able to do considerable outdoor work.

As he concluded narrating his sufferings, experience and cure to a Beacon reporter Mrs. Taylor, who has been his faithful helpmeet these many years, said she wished to add her testimony in favor of Pink Pills. "To the pills alone is due the credit of raising Mr. Taylor from a helpless invalid to the man he is to-day," said Mrs. Taylor. Both Mr. and Mrs. Taylor cannot find words to express the gratitude they feel or recommend too highly Pink Pills to suffering humanity. Any inquiries addressed to them at Geneva, O., regarding Mr. Taylor's case they will cheerfully answer as they are anxious that the whole world shall know what Pink Pills have done for them and that suffering humanity may be benefitted thereby.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

THE LADY POVERTY.

The Lady Poverty was fair,
But she has lost her looks of late
With change of times and change of air.
Ah, slattern! She neglects her hair,
Her gown, her shoes; she keeps no state,
As once when her pure feet were bare.

Or—almost worse, if worse can be—
She scolds in parlors, dusts and trims,
Watches and counts. Oh, is this she
Whom Francis met, whose step was free,
Who with obedience caroled hymns,
In Umbria walked with chastity?

Where is her ladyhood? Not here,
Not among modern kinds of men;
But in the stony fields, where clear
Through the thin trees the skies appear,
In delicate spare soil and fen
And slender landscape and austere.
—Pall Mall Gazette.

PLUFFLES' RESCUE.

Mrs. Hauksbee was sometimes nice to her own sex. Here is a story to prove this, and you can believe just as much as ever you please:

Pluffles was a subaltern in the Unmentionables. He was callow, even for a subaltern. He was callow all over like a canary that had not finished fledging itself. The worst of it was he had three times as much money as was good for him, Pluffles' papa being a rich man and Pluffles being the only son. Pluffles' mamma adored him. She was only a little less callow than Pluffles, and she believed everything he said.

Pluffles' weakness was not believing what people said. He preferred what he called "trusting to his own judgment." He had as much judgment as he had seat or hands, and this preference tumbled him into trouble once or twice. But the biggest trouble Pluffles ever manuactured came about at Simla—some years ago when he was four and twenty.

He began by trusting to his own judgment, as usual, and the result was that after a time he was bound hand and foot to Mrs. Reiver's 'rickshaw wheels.

There was nothing good about Mrs. Reiver unless it was her dress. She was bad from her hair—which started life on a Brittany girl's head—to her boot heels, which were 2¾ inches high. She was not honestly mischievous like Mrs. Hauksbee. She was wicked in a businesslike way.

There was never any scandal. She had not generous impulses enough for that. She was the exception which proved the rule that Anglo-Indian ladies are in every way as nice as their sisters at home. She spent her life in proving that rule.

Mrs. Hauksbee and she hated each other fervently. They heard far too much to clash, but the things they said of each other were startling—not to say original. Mrs. Hauksbee was honest—honest as her own front teeth—and but for her love of mischief would have been a woman's woman. There was no honesty about Mrs. Reiver; nothing but selfishness. And at the beginning of the season, poor little Pluffles fell a prey to her. She laid herself out to that end, and who was Pluffles to resist? He went on trusting to his judgment, and he got judged.

I have seen Hayes argue with a tough horse, I have seen a tonga driver coerce a stubborn pony, I have seen a riotous setter broken to gun by a hard keeper, but the breaking in of Pluffles of the Unmentionables was beyond all these. He learned to fetch and carry like a dog, and to wait like one, too, for a word from Mrs. Reiver. He learned to keep appointments which Mrs. Reiver had no intention of keeping. He learned to take thankfully dances which Mrs. Reiver had no intention of giving him. He learned to shiver for an hour and a quarter on the windward side of elysium while Mrs. Reiver was making up her mind to come for a ride. He learned to hunt for a 'rickshaw, in a light dress suit under pelting rain, and to walk by the side of that 'rickshaw when he had found it. He learned what it was to be spoken to like a cooly and ordered about like a cook. He learned all this and many other things besides. And he paid for his schooling.

Perhaps in some hazy way he fancied that it was fine and impressive, that it gave him a status among men, and was altogether the thing to do. It was nobody's business to warn Pluffles that he was unwise. The pace that season was too good to inquire, and meddling with another man's folly is always thankless work. Pluffles' colonel should have ordered him back to his regiment when he heard how things were going. But Pluffles had got himself engaged to a girl in England the last time he went home, and if there was one thing more than another which the colonel detested it was a married subaltern. It chuckled when he heard of the education of Pluffles, and said it was "good training for the boy." But it was not good training in the least. It led him into spending money beyond his means, which were good. Above that the education spoiled an average boy and made it a tenth rate man of an objectionable kind. He wandered into a bad set, and his little bill at Hamilton's was a thing to wonder at.

Then Mrs. Hauksbee rose to the occasion. She played her game alone, knowing what people would say of her, and she played it for the sake of a girl she had never seen. Pluffles' fiancee was to come out under chaperonage of an aunt in October to be married to Pluffles.

At the beginning of August Mrs. Hauksbee discovered that it was time to interfere. A man who rides much knows exactly what a horse is going to do next before he does it. In the same way a woman of Mrs. Hauksbee's experience knows accurately how a boy will behave under certain circumstances—notably when he is infatuated with one of Mrs. Reiver's stamp. She said that sooner or later little Pluffles would break off that engagement for nothing at all—simply to gratify Mrs. Reiver, who in return would keep him at her feet and in her service just so long as she found it worth her while. She said she knew the signs of these things. If she did not, no one else could.

Then she went forth to capture Pluffles under the guns of the enemy, just as Mrs. Cusack-Bremmil carried away Bremmil under Mrs. Hauksbee's eyes.

This particular engagement lasted seven weeks—we called it the seven weeks' war—and was fought out inch by inch on both sides. A detailed account would fill a book, and would be incomplete then. Any one who knows about these things can fit in the details for himself. It was a superb fight—there will never be another like it as long as Jeakko stands—and Pluffles was the prize of victory. People said shameful things about Mrs. Hauksbee. They did not know what she was playing for. Mrs. Reiver fought, partly because Pluffles was useful to her, but mainly because she hated Mrs. Hauksbee, and the matter was a trial of strength between them. No one knows what Pluffles thought. He had not many ideas at the best of times, and the few he possessed made him conceited. Mrs. Hauksbee said, "The boy must be caught, and the only way of catching him is by treating him well."

So she treated him as a man of the world and of experience so long as the issue was doubtful. Little by little Pluffles fell away from his old allegiance and came over to the enemy, by whom he was made much of. He was never sent on outpost duty after 'rickshaws any more, nor was he given dances which never came off, nor were the drains on his purse continued. Mrs Hauksbee held him on the snaffle, and after his treatment at Mrs. Reiver's hands he appreciated the change.

Mrs. Reiver had broken him of talking about himself, and made him talk about her own merits. Mrs. Hauksbee acted otherwise, and won his confidence, till he mentioned his engagement to the girl at home, speaking of it in a high and mighty way as a "piece of boyish folly." This was when he was taking tea with her one afternoon, and discoursing in what he considered a gay and fascinating style. Mrs. Hauksbee had seen an earlier generation of his stamp bud and blossom and decay into cat captains and tubby majors.

At a moderate estimate there were about three and twenty sides to that lady's character. Some men say more. She began to talk to Pluffles after the manner of a mother, and as if there had been 300 years instead of 15 between them. She spoke with a sort of throaty quaver in her voice, which had a soothing effect, though what she said was anything but soothing. She pointed out the exceeding folly, not to say meanness, of Pluffles' conduct, and the smallness of his views. Then he stammered something about "trusting to his own judgment as a man of the world," and this paved the way for what she wanted to say next. It would have withered up Pluffles had it come from any other woman, but in the soft cooing style in which Mrs. Hauksbee put it, it only made him feel limp and repentant—as if he had been in some superior kind of church. Little by little, very softly and pleasantly, she began taking the conceit out of Pluffles, as you take the ribs out of an umbrella before recovering it. She told him what she thought of him and his judgment and his knowledge of the world, and how his performances had made him ridiculous to other people, and how it was his intention to make love to herself if she gave him the chance. Then she said that marriage would be the making of him, and drew a pretty little picture—all rose and opal—of the Mrs. Pluffles of the future going through life relying on the "judgment" and "knowledge of the world" of a husband who had nothing to reproach himself with. How she reconciled these two statements he alone knew. But they did not strike Pluffles as conflicting.

Hers was a perfect little homily—much better than any clergyman could have given—and it ended with touching allusions to Pluffles' mamma and papa and the wisdom of taking his bride home.

Then she sent Pluffles out for a walk to think over what she had said. Pluffles left, blowing his nose very hard and holding himself very straight. Mrs. Hauksbee laughed.

What Pluffles had intended to do in the matter of the engagement only Mrs. Reiver knew, and she kept her own counsel to her death. She would have liked it spoiled as a compliment, I fancy.

Pluffles enjoyed many talks with Mrs. Hauksbee during the next few days. They were all to the same end, and they helped Pluffles in the path of virtue.

Mrs. Hauksbee wanted to keep him under her wing to the last. Therefore she discountenanced his going down to Bombay to get married. "Goodness only knows what might happen by the way!" she said. "Pluffles is cursed with the curse of Reuben, and India is no fit place for him!"

In the end the fiancee arrived with her aunt, and Pluffles, having reduced his affairs to some sort of order—here again Mrs. Hauksbee helped him—was married.

Mrs. Hauksbee gave a sigh of relief when both the "I wills" had been said and went her way.

Pluffles took her advice about going home. He left the service and is now raising speckled cattle inside green painted fences somewhere at home. I believe he does this very judiciously. He would have come to extreme grief out here. For these reasons, if any one says anything more than usually nasty about Mrs. Hauksbee, tell him the story of the rescue of Pluffles.—Rudyard Kipling.

Alumina From Clay.

An important contribution appears in Comptes Rendus, by Heibling, indicating the production of alumina from clay, so as to be absolutely free from silica, and readily convertible into sulphate, etc. To this end, the clay is thoroughly incorporated with a mixture, in equal parts, of ammonia and potassium sulphates, in such proportion that three molecules of ammonium sulphate may be present to every molecule of alumina, and the mixture is made into hollow bricks, which are then heated in an oven to from 270 to 280 degrees C. At this temperature both gaseous ammonia and acid ammonium sulphate are given off, which immediately reacts with the potash salt present, acid potassium sulphate being formed—the latter, at the above temperature, combining with the alumina of the clay to form alum. The alum is finally extracted from the bricks by means of water, and freed from iron by recrystallization, and the insoluble silica remaining behind may be employed in cements. Granular alumina is prepared by spreading out the powdered alum in a thin layer on shelves arranged in a vertical tower, which is traversed by the warm, moist, ammoniacal fumes derived from the brick oven. Thus the alum is transformed in situ into alumina, retaining the form of the original powder, and potassium and ammonium sulphates.

Laundry Marks.

The French gentleman who is wrathful because a laundry in town has spoiled his spotless underlinen, putting his initials on it in indelible ink, has a host of sympathizers in this city. The habit of marking men's linen is at the bottom of the sudden return of the private washerwomen. The washerwoman almost disappeared and remained out of sight for years until men of good taste grew tired of having their shirts, collars and cuffs littered over with laundry marks. For some reason no laundry will accept the mark of another laundry, but must put its own stamp on each new piece of wearing apparel it gets hold of. The consequence is that a commercial traveler can be identified as such by whosoever sees a collar or cuff belonging to him. Wherever he stops for a day or two a new laundry puts a new mark on his clothes, until at last his collars grow to look like a bank clerk's memorandum slips, and his cuffs are covered with marks like a dead wall with posters.—New York Sun.

Affection Not Too Ardent.

Caller—I suppose you love your new sister very dearly, Tommy?

Tommy (eyeing the baby coldly)—Yes, but I'd a good deal rather have a dog.—Somerville Journal.

THE MODERN WOMAN.

INTERESTING LECTURE DELIVERED BY DR. LEON HARRISON.

Woman's Influence Purifies Passion, Sweetens Toil, Stimulates Ambition and Refines Civilization—The Ideals of Feminine Usefulness.

In the presence of a large audience at Temple Israel Dr. Leon Harrison delivered his lecture on the theme "The Modern Woman." Dr. Harrison said:

If men represent the prose, women represent the poetry of humanity. They turn houses into homes. They are the idols of domestic worship. They cultivate the graces and gentler arts of life. Their influence purifies passion, sweetens toil, stimulates ambition and refines civilization. Music and song were sounded in their praise, power acknowledged the strength of weakness, intellect bowed down at the feet of beauty. Woman is not only mother of the man, but author of the gentleman and master of both.

History will never fully record how this unseen influence has quickened philosophers, inspired poets, encouraged aspiring genius and directed even the policy of empires. 'Tis said that under kings women govern; under queens, men. They are often the power behind the throne. Little hands fashion great destinies.

I realize how tremendous is the task assumed by a public teacher when he undertakes to consider "woman." John Stuart Mill practically gave it up. He declared that no man has ever known any woman; that even a husband does not fully know his own wife; that our love of praise and fear of blame ever unconsciously make us pose before our closest associates and hide the absolute reality. Many a husband may agree with John Stuart Mill, yet the unsophisticated may venture to conjecture where he cannot assert, and standing on the platform of common experience not stray too widely from the truth.

Common experience! That is called history and reveals the gradual emancipation of womanhood from masculine brutality. Flocks and herds and women were originally possessed as chattels. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house," runs the old commandment, "nor his wife, nor his cattle." They gradually rose to the level of slaves. They were valued as useful and salable animals. They began to be purchased and owned by a husband.

They built houses, plowed fields, supported their masters and were the beasts of burden of the community. The ancient world was based upon human slavery and female subjugation. It was built upon rotten foundations. From the Jews the Christians had borrowed their exaltation of womanhood. The patriarchs' wives were their partners and equals. Prophetesses kindled the popular heart into glowing fervor, and Judæan queens commanded Jewish allegiance.

For many dark centuries wives and mothers were apparently regarded as necessary evils, until at the Crusades the world burst into sentimental song; until the age of chivalry glorified love, idealized womanhood and transformed mediæval superstition into the gallantry of knighthood.

We have now extended our horizon, we have enlarged our view, we have sunk the stereotyped, conventional woman of your and my experience into the historical figure, rising from the dust throughout the ages, breaking the yoke from her neck, mounting without effort on the floodtide of public enfranchisement until we behold her today. She has freed herself from the right of might by the might of right.

Honor the voluntary celibates that consent to perpetual loneliness rather than stoop to a degradation, enjoy a conventional happiness, and yet feel their self respect and honor oozing out through every pore of the skin. The capacity for independence and a broad, practical culture should fit every woman for the ideals of feminine usefulness, and they are:

First.—The home. The old idea is that when two are made one, man is that one; that, as the old Spanish proverb says, "When two ride on horseback, one must ride behind." This might be countenanced in countries where there is one absolute head of the state and correspondingly one absolute head of the home. But what need is there of a monarch in a land where there are 10,000,000 sovereigns, and, strangely enough, 10,000,000 subjects, 10,000,000 masters and 10,000,000 servants, the rulers identical with the ruled and the governors with the governed? Pattern your household after your country. Both command and obey. Both rule and both serve. In a word, solve the domestic problem by practicing self government.

Woman is, furthermore, the active agent in philanthropy and the warmest supporter of religion. Her broader education would make her more practical in the one and more intellectual in the other. Intelligence would substitute for sentiment in almsgiving means of self help, and for emotion in religion logical conviction and moral fiber.

There is a wide field opening for womanhood. There are great opportunities unfolding themselves. A more thorough culture alone is needed to equip these potent workers with practical sagacity, sound judgment and consistent purpose.

"An ounce of mother," says the Spanish proverb, "is worth a pound of clergy." The future of the world is in the hands of its feminine guardians. The happiness of man is dependent upon his helpmate. Its citadel is home. Its shrine is the hearthstone. Our home is more than our castle; it is our palace, for glory as well as defense. It means satisfaction in experience and joy in remembrance. Home is harmony breathed through two lives as instruments in full accord, imperfect at first and discordant, yet slowly blending, as husband prizes wife and wife husband, until at last she sets herself to man like perfect music unto noble words.—St. Louis Republic.

Nervous Children.

The mother says that this child is nervous. He should never hear this said of himself. He will soon learn to use the expression as an excuse for naughtiness. Train him to regular habits of life, secure for him simple, wholesome food, see that he gets plenty of sleep, that his nerves are not disturbed by teasing by others, and in all probability he will cease to manifest nervousness, especially if he never hears older people talk about being nervous.—Womankind.

When You Spill Ink.

A method of removing spilled ink is first to take up as much as possible with a spoon and then pour some milk on the place. This will mix with the remaining ink and must also be taken up with a spoon, and this must be repeated until the milk is hardly colored with ink at all. Then wash the place with cold water and wipe dry with a cloth.

It Banished Her Wrinkles.

A woman who has had her wrinkles banished by the physical culture process tells how it was done. The system is as follows:

First Course.—Smile as broadly as possible, place three fingers on the bunched up part of the cheek; then allow the features to relax suddenly, raising the fingers at the same time. The fingers should be placed high on the cheek bone, so that the muscles, when smiling, will push against them, giving the desired resistance necessary to the enlargement of the tissues. Repeat this process until tired.

Second Course.—Smile broadly again, but this time, instead of allowing the corners of the mouth to be curved upward, try to draw them in a straight line toward the center of the cheeks; then place the two thumbs on each corner of the mouth and work the corners backward and forward by relaxing and contracting the mouth.

Third Course.—Press the lower lip upward, and it will be seen that the chin will be raised and become hard; crook the forefinger so as to make a half circle and put it over the point of the chin, pressing it against the latter as it rises and relaxing the pressure instantly as it assumes the normal position. In this exercise the teeth should be kept closed.

These exercises are designed not only to do away with wrinkles that have appeared, but to prevent their inroads as long as possible.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Talk at the Table.

Talking is one of the best of all recreations, and the woman who understands the art possesses a most useful and enjoyable accomplishment. No dinner table is well appointed without good talkers, and the basis of interesting conversation is reality. After a course of London dinners Sir Walter Scott said: "The bishops and the lawyers talked better than the wits"—that is, the wits talked for the sake of talking, and the church and the law had something to talk about. Yet specialties and hobbies are not admissible at a dinner table, and a woman who can only talk of her own fad has no business in society. She ought to write a pamphlet or go on the lecture platform, for any conversation at the dinner table that is a strain on the attention or patience soon becomes a bore. Indeed one of the chief elements of pleasant company is a readiness to talk or to be talked to on any rational subject.

The most charming talkers let a bright listener see their thoughts in formation, for talk that has been prepared has a ready made flatness. It is the aerated thought of the moment that has the sparkle, and a good talker finds the right word by instinct, as a clever horse on a bad road always puts his foot in the right place. This fact makes the good talker also a good listener, because her best conversation will follow brightly and instantly the lead that others give it, and it prevents likewise the worst of all conversational faults—monopoly.

Tricks of Dress.

It is a very common trick with dressmakers and milliners to take the belt and hat linings which bear the stamp of the great French artists and use them over again with bonnets and gowns of their own manufacture, and even milady is not infrequently guilty of the same deception.

"I simply can't throw away my dear Worth belts," said a fashionable girl the other day. "I always use them over and over again, and I have a Virot hat lining which has done duty for half a dozen hats. When I take off my hat in a friend's house to arrange my hair, it has a very good effect, don't you know. I don't actually say that it is a Virot hat, but I toss it on the bed or chair with the inside up."

"I wonder how Estelle A. can afford to get her best dresses from Doucet," remarked one young woman to another.

"How do you know that she does? I don't believe it," answered the other incredulously.

"Oh, I know it is true," said the first speaker, "for I have seen the trademark on them myself!"

"My dear little innocent," answered her more astute companion, "she gets those belts from her married sister, who really does get her clothes from Paris, and puts them on her American made frocks."

A very puerile deception one would think, and not worth the trouble.—New York Tribune.

The Broom Should Hang.

Some of the daintiest housekeepers neglect to enforce the rule that a brush or broom should never be stood brush part down on the floor, where the straws or hairs gather dust or dampness. Every one of these articles should hang from its own hook, and as this is apt to bring the soiled part against the wall it is well to stretch a breadth of muslin or calico along the wall from the floor up, so that even the washboard is protected from stain. The muslin, of course, is washed whenever necessary. As all brooms and brushes are not provided with "hangers" a Yankee woman has invented a contrivance which can be fitted to any handle. It is a wire loop, with a string attached, and when the string once grips the handle, the loop is ready for use. The invention costs but a few cents and is of real value in hanging troublesome whisk brooms, brushes, umbrellas and the various impediments which were born to be hung.

The First Tooth.

Young mothers, watching eagerly for the "first tooth," should remember the average baby does not cut any teeth until the end of the sixth or seventh month. The teeth which usually make their appearance first are the two in the center of the lower jaw. The corresponding ones in the upper jaw follow two or three weeks later. Baby is a year old, as a rule, before the first double teeth appear and reaches the ripe age of 18 to 20 months before the difficult eyeteeth come. As soon as all of a child's teeth have appeared they should be brushed daily with a small soft brush.

Polish For Shells.

Shells frequently lose a good deal of their natural polished appearance when they are kept in the house as ornaments, for of course they are not exposed to the air and get dry in a way that cannot happen when they are lying on the seashore. To remedy this, and to give them a more lustrous appearance, they should be brushed over with the white of an egg, or with water in which a little gum arabic has been dissolved. When dry, they may be polished with a leather.

Mince Pie.

A cup cooked meat, 2 cups apple, half cup sultana raisins, half cup jelly or marmalade, a lemon, a cup brown sugar, a teaspoonful salt, half teaspoonful cinnamon, half teaspoonful allspice, half nutmeg. Chop the meat, which should first be stewed until tender; chop the apple, and then mix all thoroughly and bake between two crusts.

FORAKER IN FRONT.

WILL BE UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM OHIO.

To Succeed Calvin S. Brice—Interesting Incidents in the Career of This Republican Politician—He Gets the Office Without a Fight.

Foraker and Family.

Joseph Benson Foraker declared emphatically that he had gone out of politics for good when he was defeated for the Ohio Governorship in 1889, but he is again to the front, and will be the next United States Senator from the Buckeye State. Foraker is such a lasting fighter. It never seemed to make any difference to him, until his disastrous defeat of 1889, whether he won or lost. He went on fighting just as enthusiastically in the latter as in the former instance, and it is possible that even then he would not have given up and declared himself permanently out had it not been that politics is not a profitable occupation, and he felt the necessity of making money while he was young enough to do so. He has been practicing law now for about six years, and it is understood that he has done very well.

JOSEPH BENSON FORAKER.

Foraker is not yet 50. He was born in Rainsboro, O., in July, 1846. When he was 2 years old the family removed to a place about three miles from that village, and in the home thus established young Ben, as he was called when a boy, passed his early years. He must have been a lad of strong characteristics, for when he was only 7 years old one Sam Newell, a neighbor of the Foraker family, predicted that "one of these days" Ben would be Governor of the State of Ohio. In 1885 this prediction came true. Two years later he was re-elected to the gubernatorial chair. In 1889 he was renominated against his own better judgment and defeated. As he ran unsuccessfully for the office in 1883, two years before his first election, his candidacy in 1889 was the fourth. But the governorship was not the first responsible place filled by Mr. Foraker. He was admitted to the bar in 1869, when 23 years of age, and speedily built up a booming practice. In 1879 he was elected judge of the Superior Court of Cincinnati and remained upon the bench until 1882, when he resigned because of ill health. It is not of record that he made enemies while a judge, but every one who reads the political news of the day knows that he made lots of them while Governor. He has a frank, outspoken way of saying things that displeases many people, and he is such a strong partisan as often to go farther in his remarks concerning those of the other side than is at all agreeable. He was 15 years old when the civil war broke out. His elder brother enlisted in the Northern army, and Ben wanted to go with him dreadfully, but was not allowed to. The next year, however, he joined Company A of the Eighty-ninth infantry, Ohio volunteers. A year later, and when he was only 17 years old, he was temporarily put in command of his company. During all the time of his service, which extended to the close of hostilities, he served with much credit. When mustered out at the end of the war, at Fort Denison, he was not 19 years of age.

MRS. FORAKER.

Mr. Foraker in 1870 married Miss Julia Bundy, daughter of Hezekiah S. Bundy, now Congressman. And when Foraker goes to Washington he will take with him his wife, one of the most charming women who have graced the capital city in many years, and three most beautiful daughters. The latter are aged respectively 21, 19 and 16 years. Mrs. Foraker is an exceptionally intelligent woman and is very well informed. Being deeply interested in politics and well versed as to what is going on in the political world, she has been of very great assistance to her husband. Notwithstanding the interest she takes in things of a public nature, Mrs. Foraker is essentially a home woman and believes that a wife's and mother's greatest field of labor is in the bosom of her family. Mrs. Foraker has a gift for architecture and planned throughout their beautiful home on Cross Lane street, Walnut Hills, a suburb of Cincinnati. The house is always a center of attraction, for young people particularly, and there are always good music and good cheer. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Mrs. Foraker is active in church work.

Ill-Mannered American Tourists.

In a recent number of a Mexican paper this story is told: A wealthy Mexican gentleman and his wife were living upon their hacienda, a vast plantation. Both were highly educated and living in luxury; both spoke English, French and Spanish, and had traveled extensively. From the adjacent city it was telephoned that a number of American tourists desired to come out and see the sugar mills at work. The Mexican planter had his own horsecar line; he telephoned back a hospitable invitation, and sent out special cars to bring the tourists. Thirty of them presently arrived, well-dressed, and apparently well-to-do. Without waiting to be asked, they at once entered the residence, ransacked the house, looked at the bric-a-brac, went into the kitchen, lifted the lids off the pots and pans, and indulged in such remarks as "How can these people eat such filthy messes?" They even went so far as to enter the library, where the mistress of the house was writing, and one woman remarked, "How black she is; but she has fine hair, hasn't she?" and the whole party immediately felt of her hair.

The unfortunate Mexican lady was so astonished and terrified at the time that she submitted without remonstrance to this unparalleled indignity, and did not recover from her amazement in time to be angry until the party had gone.

Unwilling Brides.

If there is a person on earth entitled to sincere commiseration, it is an unwilling bride—a girl who has given her hand, without her heart, in marriage; and more especially is she to be pitied if her heart, unhappily, has been prepossessed by another. Can any prospect be more dreary than that which lies before such a bride? What has she to look forward to, what to expect, what to hope? Linked not for a day, but for life, to one with whom she has no sympathy—who is no more than a stranger, save that in law and in fact, but not in soul, he is her husband!

Is it not dreadful to contemplate? How much more so to experience! It is natural and it is proper that parents should desire that their daughters should marry well, and it is reasonable that they should prefer for them husbands in comfortable circumstances.

But when it comes to the exercise of compulsion in the selection of a husband—to commanding a daughter to relinquish an engagement or an attachment on which her whole soul is fixed, and to marry a man towards whom she feels indifference or dislike—that is a very different matter.

Osculatory Cordiality.

A delegate to the convention of the directors of the poor and charities spoke of his appreciation of Philadelphia hospitality by telling a story of the war. He said that when he came here on crutches, after a battle, girls sought to kiss him, but in his bashfulness he warded them off. President Lawrence, says the Call of that city, explained to the convention that the reason the girls sought to kiss the Pittsburger was because the handsome men were all away from home.

Why Men Become Bald.

Men become bald more frequently than women because of the closeness of the hats they wear, which keeps the head too hot, induces perspiration and weakens the hair. The boys of the famous Blue Coat school in London, who never wear hats, never become bald late in life.

How Pepper Grows.

The common black pepper berry grows on a climbing vine, which attains a length of from twelve to twenty feet.

RED CROSS SISTERS.

ALWAYS READY TO ANSWER HUMANITY'S CALL ANYWHERE.

Without Price and Without Prejudice These Noble Women Give Aid to the Sick and Wounded—Work of the Famous Hospital Society In New York.

Battlefields and all the accompaniments of war are the natural associations with the sign of the Red Cross. It is heard of mainly in such historical events as the struggle between Japan and China, and its sign is seen here only when the national guard or the regulars turn out in full, with the ambulance corps in attendance. Its motto is "Humanity and neutrality," and though in times of peace the "neutrality" may mean little the "humanity" means much, and the Red Cross is carrying on its work quietly and effectively in this city.

So quietly is it done that knowledge of it is far from general in the city. Physicians know of it; so do the police of the west side, but beyond their circles it is little known. Yet it has been doing a great work, not only in training young women to become Red Cross nurses, but also in helping the sick and injured poor. Its house at 233 West One Hundredth street is at once a training school and a hospital. It is known as the New York Red Cross Institute and is under the patronage of the American National Red Cross.

All the civilized nations of the world recognize the Red Cross and hold its privileges inviolable on the field of battle. When the American National Red Cross became a part of the international organization, Miss Clara Barton, who began her work of humanity nursing the wounded in the civil war, represented the stars and stripes. Since then hers has been the most prominent name in the American organization, of which she is president. It was she who organized the training school in 1892. The hospital and training school is the only place in the country where Red Cross nurses are especially trained. While originally the Red Cross was particularly for the care of those wounded in battle, and hence mainly surgical, the training in the hospital is medical and surgical equally, since all kinds of emergency cases are treated. At present the New York Red Cross is a local institution and was originally projected by New Yorkers, who called Miss Barton to their aid in the work of organizing. In event of war its nurses and doctors would go to the ends of the earth if their assistance was wanted.

Its work now is the treatment of any and all urgent cases to which its attention is called. Its nurses and physicians are ready at all hours, day or night, not only to attend to cases in the hospital, but, if required, to go to the homes of the sufferers and care for them there for charity's sake. In this it is unique. No discrimination is made in regard to the persons treated. That a man is ill and suffering is enough recommendation to the New York Red Cross. Once it is known to them all their resources are at his disposal free of any charge. Both the doctors and the sisters of the Red Cross, as the nurses are called, pledge themselves never to refuse a call and always to give the greatest possible care to all cases, no matter what the circumstances may be, without remuneration. Not inappropriate is the name of sister, for these devoted women, besides this pledge of charity, give a pledge of implicit and unquestioning obedience to the sister superintendent and to Miss Barton, the head of the order. Not only this, but they must hold themselves in readiness to go to any distance in case of war, famine, flood, fire, pestilence or any calamity sufficient in magnitude to be regarded as of national import. For this reason they are expected, even after graduation, to keep those at headquarters constantly advised as to their movements, so that, like soldiers, they can be relied upon to respond to any call.

The "sisters" must be of unquestionable character and have an ordinary high school education, or pass an examination showing them to be possessed of requisite intelligence. No examination can show whether they have the peculiar attributes that go to make a successful nurse—patience, deftness, untiring vigilance and zeal and courage. To determine this question they are put on probation, and if the "probe" shows capability she becomes a "regular" after a month.

From that time she has constant training and practice, such as any hospital nurse gets, with this in addition—that she is specially instructed in wounds of various kinds to prepare her for war work. During their time of service—three years—the candidates are required to give up their whole time to the work, either at the hospital or wherever they may be sent. For this they receive, if their circumstances are such that the money is a necessity to them, $7 a month during the first year, $10 during the second and $13 during the third. At the conclusion of the course they must pass an examination, after which they become full fledged, trained Red Cross sisters, and they may easily get $3 or $4 a day for their services outside if they so choose, but they must always be ready to answer the Red Cross call. Or, if they prefer, they may stay in the hospital after graduation.

Among the candidates there is always a mild rivalry for the worst cases. A nurse will come in full of professional exultation to tell her companions that she has on hand "a beautiful typhoid case," or has been called out to nurse what "looks delightfully like a malignant diphtheria case." This might seem like heartless levity to one who does not know the infinite patience and self devotion and kindness of these young women. Their pleasure is all in the medical aspects of the case, the "stern joy that warriors feel in foemen worthy of their steel," for disease is the enemy which they fight, and for the patient they have nothing but pity and tenderness. Surgical cases are particularly prized as offering practical examples of what would be the greatest duty of the Red Cross should occasion come. Should war come, the medical instincts of the sisters would rise up in joyousness, even while the woman's heart would shrink from the prospect.—New York Sun.

Ancient Roman Matrons.

Let the clubwoman who has plumed herself on her newness hide her diminished head. Ancient Rome had her forerunners. In Rome clubs for ladies exclusively were very numerous, some of them being for religious, others for social purposes. The most celebrated of the latter class was called the "Senate of Matrons." Connected with it was a debating society, at the meetings of which momentous questions of etiquette and dress were discussed with becoming gravity, much as they are at the present time. Sometimes the women of Rome condescended to interfere in municipal questions, and when a man so fortunate as to have gained their good will died they erected a statue to his memory.

DAY, JANUARY 31 ..... 1896

It is announced that the Santa Fe Railroad will build more miles of road in Southern California this year than they have for the past eight years. This is business, and is an indication that the backbone of the hard times for the Santa Fe is broken.

Better and cheaper bicycles are predicted for 1896, and those who want wheels should be in no hurry to pay one hundred dollars for a machine that can be sold at a fair profit at half that price. So many companies are going into the manufacture of bicycles that last year's combination can not be maintained.

When Senator Allison was introduced to the Republican caucus of the Iowa Legislature as the next President, it is reported in the dispatches that he "made a brief speech of thanks, in which he did not touch upon national issues." The prominent Republicans are afraid to declare themselves upon the important issues now before the country, but they will find out that the American people will not consent to elect any man President who is afraid to make his position clear to all the isses which demand a settlement.

A few days ago the Examiner had a long dispatch from the East, telling how Cleveland would force the Democratic National Committee to select New York as the place for holding the convention this year, so that he could have himself renominated or force the nomination of Secretary Olney. The committee has selected Chicago as the place for holding the convention and the time is fixed several weeks later than Mr. Cleveland is alleged to have wanted it, according to the Washington man who lies for the Examiner. Cleveland has been abused and lied about more than any President we have ever had, but he seems to be quite healthy.

Our Republican friends were going to show the country how to legislate just as soon as they got into power, but a cog must have slipped somewhere, as they have had control of the house and senate for some time, and so far have been unable to do anything. The house indorsed the bond policy of the President, and the senate, if it does anything, will pass a free silver bill. That is about the way the Democrats worked together last year, and it did not prove to be popular with the people, and we have an idea that that "tired feeling" will soon prevail pretty extensively when the Republican party is mentioned, unless its representatives get to work.

A senate committee has under consideration a bill which it proposes to introduce defining the Monroe doctrine and so establishing it that in the future the diplomatic officials of this government will have no difficulty in acting under it. The idea is a good one, and should be followed up. It is not a partisan question in any way and party politics should not enter into the discussion. It is difficult to see how any good citizen can oppose such a bill, and it will be interesting to note whether any one will have hardihood to do so. Certainly, should any member of Congress vote against it he ought to be promptly, severely and perpetually retired to private life.

The news from China shows a singular complication of affairs at Peking. The Emperor and the empress Dowager are said to be arrayed against each other, the old Viceroy, Li, being a supporter of the Empress. The Emperor appears to have been persuaded to issue an edict for the building of a railroad from Tien-tsin to within ten miles of Peking, but the latest news from the Chinese capitol gives the impression that the road may not be built because of palace discussions. Meanwhile, in Hunan, which has always been anti-foreign, a proclamation has been issued warning any one against selling land to French or other European missionaries. Rewards are offered to any spy who will give information of such sale of property. This shows what small foundation there is for any recent reports that the Chinese authorities were determined to give protection and aid to missionaries.

Congress is making rapid progress with its routine of work. The House has already two of the regular appropriation bills—the Pension and Military Academy bills—as well as the Urgent Deficiency bill, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs has the Consular and Diplomatic bill ready to report. But no action has been taken with regard either to coast defenses or to the navy. In view of the martial electricity with which the air has been charged since the beginning of the session, this is a singular omission. The bulk of the money appropriated by the Urgent Deficiency bill is to go toward the expenses of United States courts. We fail to see how any deficiency can be more urgent than that which exposes the principal seaports of the country to destruction by a hostile fleet. Let us have the Fortifications and Naval Appropriation bills at once. And when they come, let them embody the novelty of making the money they appropriate immediately available. It is unnecessary to wait until July to meet an emergency that may be upon us next week. It takes time to build and mount guns, and work that is six months later in beginning will take six months longer to finish.

SECTION 4. The Tax-Collector shall collect a fee of one dollar for each license sold, which shall be paid into the Salary fund of the said Inyo County.

SECTION 5. Every person, firm, or corporation, engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the said County of Inyo, before procuring the license in this ordinance provided, must make and file with the said Tax Collector his, their, or its affidavit; and if made on behalf of a firm, to be made by a member thereof, and if on behalf of a corporation, to be made by any person on its behalf; which affidavit must state his place of residence, or if a firm, its place of business, firm name, and the residence of the members thereof, and if a corporation, its corporate name, its name, principal place of business, and the name of the state or nation under the laws of which the same has been formed; that he, or they, or it is engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep (or as the case may be,) in the County of Inyo, State of California; the number of sheep of which he they, or it is the owner, or possessed and controls, in the said County of Inyo, and the marks or marks, brand or brands, on said sheep.

SECTION 6. Should any person, firm or corporation, neglect, or refuse to file with the Tax-collector the affidavit mentioned in section 5 of this ordinance, or should the said affidavit, in the opinion of the Tax Collector, fail to truly state the number of sheep of which he, they, or it is the owner, or possessed and under his, their, or its control, in said County of Inyo, it shall be the duty of said Tax Collector to corrall, and carefully count and estimate said sheep.

SECTION 7. Each license issued under the provisions of this ordinance shall be in force and of virtue from and including the first day of April of the year in which the same shall be procured, until and including the thirty first day of March of the following year.

SECTION 8. All moneys collected for licenses under the provisions of this ordinance shall be paid over to the County Treasurer of said Inyo County as other moneys, and shall be placed to the credit of the Salary fund of said County.

SECTION 9. This Ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and Ordinance No. 51 of the Board of Supervisors passed on the 5th day of January, 1894, is hereby repealed, and all ordinances and parts of Ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith are each and all of them hereby repealed.

SECTION 10. This Ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same, in the Inyo Independent, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo, at least one week; said publication to be made for said time and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

Outside News From Various Points.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—

J. Dunphy of Cerro Gordo had a very severe attack of paralysis on Tuesday. Dr. Middleton of Lone Pine sent some medicine to relieve him and at last accounts he was improving slowly. All of "Jack's" friends advised him to try a complete change of climate as his case is getting worse the longer he works in the lead mines.

There was a marriage at Lone Pine last Monday evening. The contracting parties were Mr. F. Olivas and Mrs. F. Grijalva. A serenade was given the newly made couple by the "boys" and everybody had a good time.

A. R. Wicks, a mining man from Panamint passed through Keeler Wednesday on his way to his mine near Post-Office springs.

D. C. Lane is expected on next Monday morning's stage from Pomona.

Chas. Anthony of Darwin left for Los Angeles by private conveyance one day this week. He may close up an important mining deal shortly.

During the last big storm on Saturday about six inches of snow fell at Cerro Gordo and vicinity.

Lone Pine enjoyed an epidemic of quarrels last week. A man named Brown got a beautiful black eye and there were several other scratching matches. The town of Keeler was also in the same belt of disturbance and was the scene of three fights last week. A miner named Drinskill blacked the eyes of two of his friends and then went and bought a pistol from a Chinaman and fired several shots in a reckless manner. This district should have a deputy sheriff or constable appointed. One who is a resident of Keeler. The present incumbent is absent from here and does not claim this as his residence now. The Sheriff should appoint some one else. Why not appoint D. Holland deputy if he will accept.

There are several houses for rent in Keeler at present.

J. H. Long, who has recently been employed as porter at Boland's store, left for Mojave last Monday evening.

Mrs. A. L. Boland of Lone Pine is visiting friends in Keeler at present.

John Le Moigne is laid up in Darwin with a sprained ankle.

Mr. R. J. Laws went to Keeler on last down train Wednesday evening.

J. J. Morton, one of our prominent business men of Keeler, has, it is said, decided to quit the batchlor club and wed one of Independence's fairest native daughters. "Jonnny's" many friends wish him happiness and may his pathway of married life be strewn with 'roses'.

J. A. McKenzie will go out to his mine on Friday, where he is putting in a new set of flues in the boiler which gave out last week and also to put in a new wire cable in the shaft which he is cleaning out.

A check for nearly one hundred dollars was stolen from Lane's mine in Darwin last week and the payment of it has been stopped. It is really not exactly known whether it was really stolen or only lost, future developments will show.

The practice of degraded Indian squaws coming down from the upper end of the County, namely Bishop and Independence and even as far up the country as Rhodes station and then getting hilarious on cheap China gin and tanglefoot whiskey in China town and making Rome or rather Keeler howl during the midnight hours, is getting to be too much of a nuisance for the citizens to stand much longer. The drunken orgies are not confined alone to the night hours but are frequently heard and seen in daylight. It is not very pleasant for ladies and children to hear the howls and profane language used, and some means should be taken to stop their coming in to town

Coming events cast their shadows before. So look out.

Yours Repsectfully,
TOWN TALK.

W. H. Metson, of Reddy, Campbell & Metson, and F. C. Drew, stenographer for that firm, arrived at Independence on Monday last, remaining until yesterday morning. Mr. Metson was occupied in conducting a case in the U. S. Land Office wherein Jas. S. Cain et als. were plaintiffs, vs. the Adelena Gold and Silver Mining Company.

J. S. Cain, J. W. Kelly, A. Lazard and W. S. Lilien, all of Bodie, arrived at Independence on Monday's train, returning yesterday morning. Their presence was required at the Land Office in connection with proceedings now being had to determine the ownership of certain mines at Bodie.

Correspondence

BIG PINE, Jan. 29, 1896.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—The double-barrelled communication sans date of birth and place of nativity signed in spots by "Hearer" and "Believer" published in the Inyo Register of January 23, contains certain inaccuracies and a chance for conclusions far from just to the good people of this hamlet.

Over the first "Spot" this yearner for the fallen condition of "we-uns" thus regrets: "That most of the advanced scholars of the Big Pine School went 18 miles to a "mixed" dance and got back in time for school next day." The distance referred to is stretched nearly four miles. The most plausable explanation yet suggested of this stretch was announced by one of the culprits alluded to by this would-be reformer, to wit: "The assinine largeness and expansion of the auricular organs of this moral pilot." The "mixed" character ascribed might lead the radical reader to the erroneous conclusion that some were in attendendce who were unfit associates for the aforesaid advanced scholars. That any such were present at this "mixed" dance is hereby emphatically denied. And this "unco guid" Hearer and Believer is hereby challenged by the Big Pine delegation to make good the "mixed" feature of the assembly referred to.

Should there be those of the hamlet fearful of retribution let them seek consolation under the caption of "Things we believe," and be thankful that both the teachers of the Big Pine school must from the formula therein set forth sufficiently suit this righteous scribe to save the hamlet from the fate of Sodom.

Anent the statement under the caption of "Things we know" referring to the fact that the ear-gathered summary of our moral condition fails to suit its author, the pious wish is hereby recorded: That should the writer's prayer for health get the same answer accorded the supplication for immunity from the waste basket, that he, or she, or it, of the dignified plural will evince proper gratitude and come again. Your chromo will be gladly forwarded post-paid on receipt of address.

SWAMPER.

BIG PINE, Cal. Jan. 28, 1896.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—In justification of our new arrivals at Modena a word may not be out of place in reply to the statement of the writer who aired its peculiar ides in the Register as "Believer," in the issue of January 23, 1896. That dark horse—or mare—is in error. The social dance was the result of a general invitation from our new neighbors to unite with them in a hearty welcome to our isolated country. The response was quite general from here. So far as the mixed dance is concerned we can safely say that those who went from here attended with none but good intentions and conducted themselves in a becoming manner. So far as the statement to the effect that one man fell, "Believer" is reminded that often the most cherished tree in the forest falls without injury to its neighbor. We reply to the uncalled-for slander referred to in no spirit of animosity but only in defense of our sons and daughters, praying that they may out-live the malignant slanders of "Believer."

Editor Lyceum,
Jan. 30, 1896

The society was called to order at seven o'clock by the President, H. D. Gill.

The literary exercises opened with a duet by Ed. and Joe Bell.

A suitable programme was then rendered by members of the society.

The topic of discussion for the evening was: Resolved, "That there is more pleasure in pursuit than in in possession;" It was warmly contested by P. W. Forbes Esq., Leon Marks, and Miss Bertha Partridge for the negative and H. D. Gill, Miss Frances Aguirre and Geo. H. Lewis, for the affirmative. The victory resulting in favor of the negative.

We kindly thank P. W. Forbes Esq. for helping us with the debate, and hope to see him often.

The question for February first is: Resolved, "That agriculture is more beneficial to California than mining."

The following visitors were present: Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Forbes, Mrs. H. D. Gill, Misses Maud Cook, Lizzie Thompson, Rosa Roeper; Messrs Harry Cook, Norm Mairs, Paul Mairs, Ivan Bunney. Members present, 10.

We kindly invite all who can make it convenient, to attend all future meetings.

Miss ANNA SCHABBELL,
Secretary.

Washington's Birthday.

Arrangements are being made to give a grand celebration at Big Pine on Washington's Birthday. The citizens have subscribed liberally toward a fund for defraying the expenses. It is proposed to have two races, one a quarter mile dash and the other one 780 yards and repeat, free for all horses owned in the country. A complete programme will be prepared and published next week. As the day occurs on Saturday in all probability the ball will be given on Friday evening, the 21st. Arrangements will be made to entertain visitors from all over the valley and a good time is sure to be had.

Procure Patents.

A gentleman in speaking of the title to mines, in the Shasta Courier says: "In view of complications that may arise, and to surely guard against the same, it is of almost first importance that in order to sell mines, the property ownership be secured by Government patent. Such a deed shows the owner's faith in the property and also carries the undoubted right to transfer his holding. Eastern and European investors look upon a Government patent to mineral property as a matter of prime importance, and as a passport to their confidence, when a sale is sought. Many sales have not been made, or property even considered, on account of absence of the U. S. title. A patent is also of value to a mine owner whether he desires to sell or not, as with it, he is not only secure from encroachment but relieved of assessment work and free to go where and when he listeth in pursuit of what he may desire.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o'clock, a. m., on Thursday, April 9, 1896, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County or the term of one year beginning May 10, 1896, and ending May 9, 1897.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sicks properly admitted to contractor's care on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said Ninth day of April, 1896, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

How Insects Breathe.

Take any moderately large insect and examine it closely. You will observe, even with the naked eye, that the body is pierced with a number of holes, usually from 18 to 20 in number. These minute openings are the apertures through which air is admitted to the system, and they are generally so wonderfully perfect that no extraneous mater of any kind can possibly effect an entrance. Sometimes these holes are furnishd with a delicate pair of horny clasps, which can be opened and closed at the will of the insect. In other cases—this class is far more numerous — they are densely fringed with stiff, interlacing bristles, which form a filter that admits nothing but air. This bristle filter is so perfectly yet so delicately made that it has been found absolutely impossible to force even such a subtle fluid as spirits of wine through it. These apertures or "breathing holes" communicate with two large tubes, which extend along the entire body of the insect, furnishing fresh air to the whole system. Beside these two main tubes, there are innumerable delicate branches, which run in all directions through the insect's body, continually dividing and subdividing until a wonderful network is the result. This mechanism allows air to penetrate into every fiber of the insect's anatomy, even into the nerve lines of the gauzy wings—providing it has wings—and into the feet and antennæ.—St. Louis Republic.

The Lobster's Birth Name.

"Did you ever see the name a lobster is born with?" asked a fish dealer the other day. "It is marked on his body. No? Well, I'll show you one."

The dealer took a live lobster out of a heap on the marble slab.

"Its name is Joe," the dealer said after he had inspected one of its legs. "Now, can you find it?"

The customer took the lobster gingerly by the back of the neck, where it could not reach his hand with its nippers. Turning it on its back so that the brown legs at its side flopped backward, a smooth streak half an inch long, and nearly as wide, was seen on the inside of the thigh. In this streak, like a mosaic, were short lines, as though some one had printed on it with indelible brown ink in backhand the characters JOE.

"Some lobsters are named Jim," the dealer said, "some Jack, others John, and I once clearly made out the name Julia."—Strand Magazine.

Men and Ages.

I think that men are just as sensitive and fussy regarding their ages as women can be. I was discussing this point the other evening at the house of an acquaintance, and one guest, a gentleman of about 55, said, with a cheerful frankness that seemed most convincing: "All this concealment of age is nonsense. What's the use of telling one tale when old Father Time tells another? Age is not a thing to be ashamed of, by any means. I never make any concealment of mine. I'm 45 and say it boldly."

And then there was a cold and clammy silence that could have been cut in chunks. This sort of "frank and honest" method is very much in vogue just now.—Polly Pry in New York Recorder.

The True Cosmetics.

"A Daily Reader" asks about the quinine bath which "complexion specialists" recommend. This is merely a wash of alcohol in which a little quinine has been dissolved. It is said to "tone up" the skin and increase its ability to throw off impurities. But much better for the skin than the use of any tonic of this kind are plenty of fresh air, a good digestion, a daily bath and no end of fine, pure soap.—

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

By GILBERT PARKER.

[Copyright, 1893, by the J. B. Lippincott Co.]

He hoped that they would take her to their hearts and cherish her. He knew their firm principles of honor, and that he could trust them to be kind to his wife until he returned to share the affection which he was sure would be given to her. It was not his intention to return to England for some time yet. He had work to do in connection with his proposed colony, and a wife, even a native wife, could not well be a companion in the circumstances. Besides Lali—his wife's name was Lali—would be better occupied in learning the peculiarities of the life in which her future would be cast. It was possible they would find her an apt pupil. Of this they could not complain that she was untraveled, for she had ridden a horse, bareback, half across the continent. They could not cavil at her education, for she knew several languages—aboriginal languages—of the north. She had merely to learn the dialect of English society and how to carry with acceptable form the costumes of the race to which she was going. Her own costume was picturesque, but it might appear unusual in London society. Still they could use their own judgment about that.

Then, when she was gone beyond recall, he chanced one day to put on the coat he wore when the letters and paper declaring his misfortune came to him. He found his brother's letter; he opened it and read it. It was the letter of a man who knew how to appreciate at their proper value the misfortunes as the fortunes of life. While Frank Armour read he came to feel for the first time that his brother Richard had suffered, maybe, from some such misery as had come to him through Julia Sherwood. It was a dispassionate, manly letter, relieved by a gentle wit and hinting with a careful kindness that a sudden blow was better for a man than a lifelong thorn in his side. Of Julia Sherwood he had nothing particularly bitter to say. He delicately suggested that she acted according to her nature, and that in the seesaw of life Frank had had a sore blow, but this was to be borne.

The letter did not say too much. It did not magnify the difficulty. It did not depreciate it. It did not even directly counsel. It was wholesomely, tenderly judicial. Indirectly it dwelt upon the steadiness and manliness of Frank's character. Directly, lightly and without rhetoric it enlarged upon their own comradeship. It ran over pleasantly the days of their boyhood when they were hardly ever separated. It made distinct, yet with no obvious purpose, how good were friendship and confidence—which might be the most unselfish thing in the world—between two men. With the letter before him Frank Armour saw his act in a new light.

As we said, it is possible if he had read it on the day when his trouble came to him he had not married Lali nor sent her to England on this—to her—involuntary mission of revenge. It is possible also that there came to him the first vague conception of the wrong he had done this Indian girl, who undoubtedly married him because she cared for him after her heathen fashion, while he had married her for nothing that was commendable, not even for passion, which may be pardoned, nor for vanity, which has its virtues. He had had his hour with circumstance. Circumstance would have its hour with him in due time. Yet there was no extraordinary revulsion. He was still angry, cynical and very sore. He would see the play out with a consistent firmness. He almost managed a smile when a letter was handed to him some weeks later, bearing his solicitor's assurance that Mrs. Frank Armour and her maid had been safely bestowed on the Aphrodite for England. This was the first act in his tragic comedy.

CHAPTER II.

When Mrs. Frank Armour arrived at Montreal, she still wore her Indian costume of clean well broidered buckskin, moccasins and leggings, all surmounted by a blanket. It was not a distinguished costume, but it seemed suitable to its wearer. Mr. Armour's agent was in a quandary. He had had no instructions regarding her dress. He felt, of course, that as Mrs. Frank Armour she should put off these garments and dress as far as possible in accordance with her new position. But when he spoke about it to Mackenzie, the elderly maid and companion, he found that Mr. Armour had said that his wife was to arrive in England dressed as she was. He saw something ulterior in the matter, but it was not his province to interfere. And so Mrs. Frank Armour was a passenger by the Aphrodite in her buckskin garments.

What she thought of it all is not quite easy to say. It is possible that at first she only considered that she was the wife of a white man—a thing to be desired—and that the man she loved was hers forever—a matter of indefinable joy to her. That he was sending her to England did not fret her, because it was his will, and he knew what was best. Busy with her contented and yet somewhat dazed thoughts of him, she was too happy to be very active mentally, even if it had been the characteristic of her race. She was not at first aware of how much notice she excited and how strange a figure she was in this staring city. When it did dawn upon her, she shrank a little, but still was placid, preferring to sit, with her hands folded in her lap, idly watching things. She appeared oblivious that she was the wife of a man of family and rank. She was only thinking that the man was hers—all hers.

He had treated her kindly enough in the days they were together, but she had not been a great deal with him because they traveled fast, and his duties were many, or he made them so, but the latter possibility did not occur to her. When he had hastily bidden her farewell at Port Arthur, he had kissed her and said, "Goodby, my wife." She was not acute enough yet in the inflection she did not speculate. He was sending her—that was enough.

The woman given to her as maid had been well chosen. Armour had done this carefully. She was Scotch, was reserved, had a certain amount of shrewdness, would obey instructions and do her duty carefully. What she thought about the whole matter she kept to herself. Even the solicitor at Montreal could not find out. She had her instructions clear in her mind. She was determined to carry them out to the letter, for which she was already well paid and was likely to be better paid, because Armour had arranged that she should continue to be with his wife after they got to England. She understood well the language of Lali's tribe, and because Lali's English was limited she would be indispensable in England.

Mackenzie therefore had responsibility, and if she was not elated over it she still knew the importance of her position and had enough practical vanity to make her an efficient servant and companion. She already felt that she had got her position in life, from which she was to go out no more forever. She had been brought up in the shadow of Alnwick castle, and she knew what was due to her charge—by other people. Herself only should have liberty with her. She was taking Lali to the home of General Armour, and that must be kept constantly before her mind. Therefore from the day they set foot on the Aphrodite she kept her place beside Mrs. Armour, sitting with her—they walked very little—and scarcely ever speaking, either to her or to the curious passengers. Presently the passengers became more inquisitive and made many attempts at being friendly, but these received little encouragement. It had become known who the Indian girl was, and many wild tales went about as to her marriage with Francis Armour. Now it was maintained she had saved his life at an outbreak of her tribe; again that she had found him dying in the woods and had nursed him back to life and health; yet again that she was a chieftainess, successful claimant against the Hudson's Bay company, and so on.

"Goodby, my wife."

There were several on board who knew the Armours well by name, and two who knew them personally. One was Mr. Edward Lambert, a barrister of the Middle Temple, and the other was Mrs. Townley, a widow, a member of a well known Hertfordshire family, who, on a pleasant journey in Scotland, had met, conquered and married a wealthy young American and had been left alone in the world by no means portionless 18 months before.

Lambert knew Richard Armour well, and when, from Francis Armour's solicitor, whom he knew, he heard just before they started who the Indian girl was he was greatly shocked and sorry. He guessed at once the motive, the madness, of this marriage. But he kept his information and his opinions mostly to himself, except in so far as it seemed only due to friendship to contradict the numberless idle stories going about. After the first day at sea he came to know Mrs. Townley, and when he discovered that they had many mutual friends and that she knew the Armours he spoke a little more freely to her regarding the Indian wife and told her what he believed was the cause of the marriage.

Mrs. Townley was a woman—a girl—of uncommon gentleness of disposition, and in spite of her troubles inclined to view life with a sunny eye. She had known of Frank Armour's engagement with Miss Julia Sherwood, but she had never heard the sequel. If this was the sequel—well, it had to be faced. But she was almost tremulous with sympathy when she remembered Mrs. Armour and Frank's gay, fashionable sister, Marion, and contemplated the arrival of this Indian girl at Greyhope. She had always liked Frank Armour, but this made her angry with him, for on second thought she was not more sorry for him and for his people than for Lali, the wife. She had the true instinct of womanhood, and she supposed that a heathen like this could have feelings to be hurt and a life to be wounded as herself or another. At least she saw what was possible in the future when this Indian girl came to understand her position, only to be accomplished by contact with the new life so different from her past.

Both she and Lambert decided that she was very fine looking, notwithstanding her costume. She was slim and well built, with modest bust and shapely feet and ankles. Her eyes were large, meditative and intelligent, her features distinguished. She was a goodly product of her race, being descended from a line of chiefs and chieftainesses, broken only in the case of her grandfather, as tions of Saxon speech to catch the satire—almost involuntary—in the last two words. She remembered the words, however, and the kiss, and she was quite satisfied. To what she was going we have said. Her hands, the two kindly inquisitors decided, were almost her best point. They were perfectly made, slim, yet plump, the fingers tapering, the wrist supple. Mrs. Townley then and there decided that the girl had possibilities. But here she was, an Indian, with few signs of civilization or that breeding which seems to white people the only breeding fit for earth or heaven.

Mrs. Townley did not need Lambert's suggestion that she should try to approach the girl, make friends with her and prepare her in some slight degree for the strange career before her.

Mrs. Townley had an infinite amount of tact. She knew it was best to approach the attendant first. This she did, and to the surprise of other lady passengers received no rebuff. Her advance was not, however, rapid. Mackenzie had had her instructions. When she found that Mrs. Townley knew Francis Armour and his people, she thawed a little more, and then very hesitatingly she introduced her to the Indian wife. Mrs. Townley smiled her best, and there were many who knew how attractive she could be at such a moment.

There was a slight pause, in which Lali looked at her meditatively, earnestly, and then those beautiful wild fingers glided out and caught her hand and held it, but she spoke no word. She only looked inquiringly, seriously, at her new found friend and presently dropped the blanket away from her and sat up firmly, as though she felt she was not altogether an alien now and had a right to hold herself proudly among white people, as she did in her own country and with her own tribe, who had greatly admired her. Certainly Mrs. Townley could find no fault with the woman as an Indian. She had taste, carried her clothes well and was superbly fresh in appearance, though her hair still bore very slight traces of the grease which even the most aristocratic Indians use.

But Lali would not talk. Mrs. Townley was anxious that the girl should be dressed in European costume and offered to lend her and rearrange dresses of her own, but she came in collision with Mr. Armour's instructions. So she had to assume a merely kind and comforting attitude. The wife had not the slightest idea where she was going, and even when Mackenzie, at Mrs. Townley's oft repeated request, explained very briefly and unpicturesquely she only looked incredulous or unconcerned. Yet the ship, its curious passengers, the dining saloon, the music, the sea and all had given her suggestions of what was to come. They had expected that at table she would be awkward and ignorant to a degree. But she had at times eaten at the trader's table at Fort Charles and had learned how to use a knife and fork. She had also been a favorite with the trader's wife, who had taught her many civilized things. Her English, though far from abundant, was good. Those, therefore, who were curious and rude enough to stare at her were probably disappointed to find that she ate like "any Christom man."

DID THIS DOG USE REASON?

Knocked From a Bier Once, He "Died" Again and Made Himself Secure.

"I've come to the conclusion that dogs have the use of a certain and a great amount of reasoning power," said Carver B. Cline to a reporter. "I was convinced by one of Duncan's dogs.

"These animals always obey the commands of their master, but the case of which I speak was one in which the dog saw the situation and acted for what he thought was the best solution of a difficulty.

"The dogs do a fire act. One of them runs up a ladder, seizes a dummy canine from the flames, carried him to the ground and then dies. Duncan's collie died all right this particular night and was put on a stretcher several feet above the floor, on two small wooden horses. The widow dog and the ambulance came on. The disconsolate widow, you know, makes a rush for the corpse, with paws poked into her crying eyes. Then she is led away by sympathizing friends.

"She made her rush for the bier this night, but she put too much force into it, and her defunct spouse was knocked from his resting place.

"Well, that animal fell to the floor just as limp as any body could be. He lay there motionless, but I saw him open one eye and kind of take in the situation. Then he seemed to come to the conclusion that he had not been taught to die just that way, so he jumped up, climbed to the bier and died all over again.

"The widow was by this time over near the ambulance in the center of the stage. As soon as the hero husband had died the second time she again made a rush for the bier. The dead brute was ready this time. He had one eye open. When he saw her coming, he just reached over the side of his resting place and took a good grip with both his front paws. The widow's grief was powerful, but that death grip held.

"Now, did that dog use reason?"—New York Times.

Women and Horses.

A man who has been much associated with horses and who ought to know makes the unqualified assertion that women are better fitted than men to excel in horsemanship. That is by no means saying that all women are good drivers or riders. Indeed it is peculiarly a feminine trait to twitch and tug the reins as if they were ropes attached to anything but the tender mouth of a horse, thus cruelly torturing the helpless animal, who unhappily doesn't know enough to refuse to go the faster for such treatment.

But when a woman has a natural taste for driving and cultivates it she is apt to handle the ribbons superlatively well and to have a lighter and more skillful hand than the man driver of equal training. The reason suggested for this is that the horse is in his nature much like a sensitive, nervous child, needing to be treated with gentleness, firmness and patience, and women, who as a sex have always had the care of children and have by training and heredity acquired the qualities which fit them for the management of children, are thereby also fitted for the management of the horse.

The Girl's Health.

"If the girl, on entering womanhood, understands her body as she does other scientific works," said Miss Lindley, "recognizes it as the vehicle and abiding place of her mind and understands her mind as the educated individual for which body culture has been carefully given, her graduation certificate will not be the passport to invalidism. Such a millennium is possible, but it must begin in the home and with the mother. As the home is, so is the country, and both home and country will be made by the 'coming girl.'"

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

A Delightful Nursery.

A delightful suit of rooms belonging to two little children consists of a day and night nursery that connect with each other. The night nursery contains two little brass bedsteads, with small rugs on the hard wood floor only in front of the beds and white iron washstands. The room has a large fireplace, with a wide hearth, and seats at either side of the fireplace. The walls are covered by a pretty nursery paper, gay with birds and flowers and butterflies, and the furniture, of which there is very little, has gay light colored chintz cushions. The day nursery has a bay window, with wide seats in the window sills. On a wide shelf about five feet from the floor are kept the gifts too dainty for daily use, nursery china, dolls and curious and interesting birthday gifts, to be handled only occasionally. Across one end of the room there is a seat that opens, where the toys rugged enough for everyday playmates are kept. There are a low bookcase; a low, large oak table, with chairs of the proper height round it; a cupboard, with glass doors, for the nursery dishes, and a small refrigerator. This room also has its fireplace, and the fireplaces in both rooms are protected by high brass fenders. The rug in the larger room is of heavy felt carpet, with a thick layer of cork beneath. This is used both for warmth and to save bumps.—New York Post.

The Charm of Manner.

A modern thinker has said, "The only empire freely conceded to women is that of manners, but it is worth all the rest put together." And a young mother of the writer's acquaintance, speaking of her baby girl, said earnestly: "If I might claim a fairy godmother's single gift for her, it should not be beauty, intellect or wit, but that charm of manner which makes its possessor universally liked." We instinctively feel that the graces and amenities of life must always be largely under the direction of women, and these graces and amenities are too strong a power to be ignored. One sees women who may be intellectually ignorant and narrow, but whose charming manners gave them a social power quite beyond their broader and better educated sisters. And, after all, to make pleasantness and peace for all one's little world, to make one's house a place where every guest enters eagerly and leaves reluctantly, to give courage to the timid, ease to the awkward, to repress undue vigor of discussion and to make even controversy pleasant, all belong to woman's traditional sphere, and it is a sphere so important that even the virtues are not quite complete without it.

Harriet Hosmer.

Harriet Hosmer was born in Watertown, Mass., in 1830. Her mother and sister died of consumption, and this led to an outdoor life, in which she soon showed her genius by modeling horses, dogs and other forms in clay. In 1851 she executed her first important work, an ideal head of Hesper. Her work has brought her riches as well as fame. Besides a talent for sculpture she has shown herself a gifted writer. Perhaps her most important recent work is the statue of Queen Isabella prepared for the Columbian exposition.

FORECASTERS.

Some people are so influenced by the electric currents of the atmosphere that they can foretell the coming of a thunderstorm with perfect accuracy, and others there are with nerves so sensitive that they are sure of having neuralgia from a low and fretful state of the nervous system. Now why can't the latter be warned in time and know that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. To use St. Jacob's Oil promptly will ward off an attack, or if attacked, will promptly cure. Such people can do for themselves what others do from weathers prophecies, heed the signals and save the wreck and disaster.

AN ENGAGED MAN

Young Gallivant Spooner could never sufficiently regret the day when he made an offer of marriage to Miss McSnarey. She was daughter of that rough old customer, Captain McSnarey, late of the Indian navy, and was a young woman in whom strength of will and determination to get a husband predominated considerably over feminine charms and graces of person. What had made Spooner propose to her at all was a mystery to the young man's friends; indeed, it was more or less a mystery to himself. But he was a weak minded, compliant young fellow, and Jane McSnarey had him all to herself for three weeks one summer, in a quiet country watering place, whither she and her father had designedly pursued him.

Yet, with all this, it is doubtful whether he would have been "brought up to the scratch," had not Captain McSnarey, a truculent old ruffian, of whom Spooner stood in great bodily fear, announced his intention—in a general way and without reference to particular persons—of horsewhipping any man whom he should find trifling with his daughter's virgin affections. Quite as much urged by this threat as allured by Miss McSnarey's fascinations, Spooner propounded the momentous question, and received from her faltering lips a bashful affirmative.

But as time went on and young Spooner betrayed no anxiety to consummate his happiness by marriage, Miss McSnarey grew impatient, and she more than once hinted to her fiance that it was now high time to start housekeeping. The young man, however, ignored these hints, except when they were very strong indeed, and then he pleaded various excuses for delay. The fact was the better he knew Miss McSnarey the less he relished the prospect of marrying her, and though conscious that the dreaded day of their union must come at last, he determined to put it off as long as he possibly could.

In this determination Spooner was loudly applauded by his bachelor friends, among whom his engagement was a standing joke; more especially as he was always boasting of his conquests over other girls—notably over one or two with whom he had entered into correspondence, "just for the fun of the thing," in answer to some advertisements, in The Matrimonial Herald. Whether these conquests were all so complete as Spooner represented them to be, his friends were not unreasonably disposed to doubt. But, as his braggart stories were decidedly amusing, they affected for the most part a solemn belief in them, and took a malicious pleasure in drawing the self satisfied young fellow out. One day at the club Dick Bolus, an intimate acquaintance, strolled up to him with a newspaper in his hand.

"Well, Spooner," he inquired, with a confidential wink, "got anything on in the matrimonial line just now—eh?"

"Nothing," replied Spooner, "except my standing engagement with Miss McSnarey. You see," with a languid, blase air, which he was very fond of assuming, "the girls are all very well for a bit, but when a chap has had as much of 'em as I have, they soon begin to pall, don't you know?"

"Well, you should be able to speak with authority on that subject, if anybody can," answered Bolus. "And, indeed, I've always heard that love is a very—what d'ye call 'em—ephemeral sort of affair, but when there's money in the case it must make constancy to the young lady a very good deal easier, mustn't it?"

"Certainly, dear boy," returned Spooner with an air of patronizing experience. "But of what are your remarks apropos? Are you intending to swallow a 'gilded pill,' by any chance?"

Bolus shook his head despondingly.

"No such luck!" he said. "But I've just read such a ripping advertisement in The Standard, here—inserted by a beautiful young lady with five thousand dollars a year!"

"Why not answer it, then?" asked Spooner.

"It would be no go for me, I'm afraid," answered Bolus, "because," with a comical downward glance at his own short, round person, "the gentleman is to be tall and of a military figure. But it might do for you, old fellow; for you are tall and rather of the military cut, especially since you've taken to having the shoulders of your coats padded."

"You forget that I'm already engaged," rejoined Spooner, with a sickly smile.

"Oh, never mind that," cried his friend lightly. "You might enter into correspondence with this advertising beauty, just for a joke, you know; and then, if you found her really such a stunner as she represents herself to be, you could easily get up a quarrel with Miss McSnarey and break off your engagement, couldn't you?"

"Engagements aren't so easily broken off as you think," returned Spooner ruefully. "But let us hear this advertisement, old man."

Bolus held up the paper, found the place and read as follows:

Young lady, aged twenty-one, beautiful, good figure, accomplished, with five thousand dollars a year of her own, desires to correspond with a gentleman with a view to matrimony. Age must not exceed thirty; must be handsome, tall and of a military figure, and also must have private means. N. B.—No man under five feet ten inches need apply. Address "Queenie," Kelly's, Vigo street, W.

"There!" cried Bolus, when he had finished. "What do you think of that, my boy? Twenty-one—beautiful—five thousand dollars a year! 'Pon my soul, it makes one's mouth water merely to read the words."

"I expect it's a hoax," answered Spooner. "I know from personal experience that many of these advertisements are."

"Not all, though!" rejoined Bolus. "I've known of several cases where they've been perfectly genuine. Besides, even if it should prove a hoax, you can always cry off. No, old fellow! This is too good a chance to be lightly thrown away. And if I were you, I should certainly answer the advertisement!"

"I don't think I can," Spooner replied. "It is rather dangerous for an engaged man. What would Miss McSnarey say if she were to 'twig' me in matrimonial correspondence with another girl?"

"Bother Miss McSnarey!" ejaculated Dick disrespectfully. "She'll never find out, bless your soul—not, at least, unless you decide to marry 'Queenie.' And then you can snap your fingers in her face and dare her to have the law of you. For the damages you'll have to pay will be a mere flea bite to a man who has married five thousand dollars a year."

Spooner took the paper from his friend and skimmed the advertisement with his own eyes. To tell the truth he was of a sentimental, pseudo-romantic disposition, and the notion of entering into amatory correspondence with a strange and beautiful young lady was by no means distasteful to him. Besides, he reflected, that to shrink from answering this advertisement would be very like giving the lie to his former boastful stories on the subject.

Bolus remarked signs of yielding about him, and always being in for a lark in which his friends compromised themselves more than he himself did, he proceeded to renew his persuasions, and after assuring him that he answered the requirements of the young lady in every particular, he added: "Come and write the letter at once. It would be madness to throw away such a chance?"

Before Spooner had time to further hesitate Bolus drew his arm through his friend's and led him toward an adjoining table. Spooner suffered himself to be conducted thither, with only the faintest show of resistance. For he was, as we have said, really very far from disliking the notion, beside the fact that he had his reputation for gallantry to sustain.

"Mind you, Bolus," he said, as he dropped into a chair at the table, "I shan't push this matter to any length. I'm merely writing for the fun of the thing—just to see what the young lady's answer will be."

"Oh, of course," the other acquiesced. "Though, if you really get a chance of marrying her and don't close with it, you'll be an awful fool, let me tell you."

"Then I fear I shall have to be a fool," rejoined Spooner. "But," taking up a pen and spreading out a sheet of note paper, "what am I to say?"

By the joint efforts of the two men a very elegant, if somewhat exaggerated, description of Spooner's various fascinations was concocted. And this, after it had been read through a score of times, touched up and carefully copied out in Spooner's finest handwriting, was duly inclosed in an envelope, addressed, stamped and posted. When this had been done they proceeded to discuss the probable outcome of the affair, speculating as to whether Spooner would get any answer at all, and if he did, what that answer was likely to be. He had not very long to wait. Two mornings later the answer actually reached him. Tearing it open with trembling fingers, he eagerly perused it.

It was very much more flattering than he had ventured to expect, and the expression of his face gradually relaxed into a self satisfied smile as he read it. The young lady stated (her letter is too long to be detailed in full) that of the numerous answers she had received Mr. Spooner's pleased her the most, and she should be glad to improve her acquaintance with him. She wished, however, that he would first forward his photograph to her under her real name (Miss Sibyl Coombs, postoffice, Richmond, Surrey), on receipt of which, if it tallied with his verbal description of himself, she would send him hers in return and arrange for a personal interview.

Spooner read this letter through several times, and was so much elated by its contents that, instead of deciding, as he should have done, to push the matter no further, he at once looked out a cabinet portrait of himself—a very flattering one, by the way—and dispatched it, with a neatly worded note, to Miss Sibyl Coombs. Then he went around to Dick Bolus' rooms to tell him what he had done and to show him the young lady's letter.

"You lucky beggar!" exclaimed Dick, when he had perused it. "Fancy your getting such a favorable reply—and by return too! When I've answered advertisements I've never had any response at all. But some fellows do get all the luck. Five thousand dollars a year, by Jupiter! Why, with your own little fortune thrown in you'll be able to live quite in style when you're married. Well, don't turn your back on an old friend, but ask me to dinner sometimes, won't you?"

"You know there's no question of my marrying her!" Spooner replied. "I have only entered into correspondence with her for a joke."

"My dear boy," rejoined Bolus, with a sage shake of his head, "in these hard times five thousand a year is not to be treated as a joke, I ran tell you. And the fellow who throws away that income, and a pretty wife into the bargain, merely because he is engaged to somebody else, is nothing short of a confounded fool!"

After a great deal more conversation in that strain, Spooner denying that his intentions were serious and Bolus insisting that they certainly ought to be, the former took his departure, promising to bring Miss Sibyl's photograph around to his friend as soon as it should arrive.

By return of post it reached him, sure enough, accompanied by a short, but very gushing letter. Spooner looked through the letter first. It was well calculated to flatter his personal vanity, for it informed him that Miss Coombs was quite satisfied with his portrait, which answered her highest expectations, and it requested him to call upon her personally at the Hotel Metropole the next day but one, when she would be in town. He then turned his attention to the photograph, which he unpacked rather anxiously. What would she be like? Would she really be pretty? Yes, yes! she was very pretty—nay, more than that, lovely! Large eyes, tiny mouth, a delicate nose. A graceful, well rounded figure—it was a full length portrait—and miniature hands and feet.

The impressionable Spooner was positively enraptured by the photograph. It far exceeded his highest hopes, and he hurried off, with the greatest eagerness, to show it to Dick Bolus. Bolus admired it quite as much as he did. In fact both young men agreed that, even allowing for embellishments on the part of the photographer and possible trifling imperfections which might appear in a photograph, the original must be a "devilish pretty gal."

"Of course," said Bolus, after loudly congratulating Spooner upon his good fortune—"of course you mean to keep this appointment with the young woman at the Metropole?"

"I—I—suppose I must," answered Spooner undecidedly, wavering between his sentimental desire to make the personal acquaintance of so lovely a girl and the fear of involving himself in a hopeless complication.

"I should rather think so," replied Bolus emphatically. "Why, man alive, if you were already married to Miss McSnarey, instead of being merely engaged to her, I should find no fault with you for being seduced by beauty like this."

While he was speaking he held the photograph in his hand, and gloated, with his little bloodshot eyes, over Miss Sibyl's charms, as depicted in her portrait.

"But—but—don't you see," expostulated Spooner, who was, however, clearly very anxious to attend the interview, "it will involve me—an engaged man—in very awkward consequences, if I let this matter go too far."

"Consequence be d—d," retorted Bolus, who could be amazingly reckless where other people were concerned. "If you are a lad of sense and spirit, you'll let Miss McSnarey go to the—I mean you'd chuck her over, and marry Queenie without hesitation. Have you written to say you'll keep the appointment yet?"

Spooner replied in the negative.

"Well, then," continued his friend, "by all means do so at once! There are pens, ink and paper on the table to your right."

Spooner wavered a little longer, just for the sake of appearances. But his mind was really made up, and he soon sat down and wrote the letter. Of course it was very wrong, not to say dishonorable, of him to behave in such a manner. But he was weak and vain, as well as silly and sentimental, and Miss Coombs' gushing letters, added to her beauty, as represented in her photograph, had quite turned his head.

The next forty-eight hours he spent in a state of feverish excitement. And when the time of his appointment drew near he made the very choicest toilet that his wardrobe would permit. Then, at last, after standing on a chair in front of the pier glass and carefully surveying his reflected person, beside rehearsing a series of taking attitudes and engaging smiles, he started off for the Metropole. His heart beat faster and faster as he neared the hotel. Indeed, when he reached the entrance and had to inquire of the porter for Miss Coombs' apartments he could scarcely articulate the words for the fluttering sensation at his heart. And when the waiter, who was showing him up, paused just outside the door to inquire his name, he actually could not speak for excitement, but could only hand him his card and leave him to read it for himself.

With a sudden sposmodic movement, of which your genuine waiter alone has the secret, the man threw open the door, announcing in sonorous tones, "Mr. Gallivant Spooner."

Positively trembling with combined shyness and expectancy, the young man entered to find himself face to face with—Miss McSnarey and her father.

The latter's face wore a peculiarly ominous scowl, and he carried in his hand a heavy, knotted crab stick of most formidable dimensions.

Let us draw a veil over the painful scene that followed. Suffice it to say that, while Captain McSnarey's crab stick was not called into requisition, Mr. Gallivant Spooner was only permitted to leave the hotel after fixing an early date for the happy event. And he was married to Jane McSnarey just three weeks later.—True Flag.

The Colorado Canyon.

The survey of the canyon of the Colorado has been completed, and R. H. Stanton has given a full account of it. In spite of the great depths of the canyon and the cliffs of sandstone, marble and granite composing it, a railway can, in his opinion, be built through it without much tunneling, thus opening up some of the grandest scenery in the world. In many places the canyon expands into wide valleys, and even where it narrows there are terraces along the sides like the "paralleled roads" of Glen Roy, Scotland, which seem designed by nature for track and rail. The tributaries which enter the canyon laterally are, as a rule, small, and can be easily bridged. The distance of 1,019 miles through the canyon district will comprise only twenty miles of tunneling and ninety-nine miles of granite cutting.—Engineering News.

A Cure for Hydrophobia.

A new cure for hydrophobia is said to have been discovered by a certain Dr. Engels in Africa. It consists of an extract prepared from a variety of the palm tree, which is injected under the patient's skin. The immediate effect of the remedy is to cause a moderate fever. On the third day the fever subsides, leaving the affected part free from swelling or inflammation, and on the fifth, or at the latest the seventh day, the cure is complete. Of sixty-seven farmers treated in this way for the bites of rabid dogs, sixty-five recovered and two died of weakness. The remedy is said to be equally efficacious in the case of the bites of snakes.—London Graphic.

The oldest man in the world is believed to be Michael Solis, a half breed living in Bogola, in San Salvador. It is said to be certain that he is 180 years old.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY—AN HISTORIO PILE OF CHURCH ARCHITECTURE.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY, that unique and historic pile of church architecture, which has challenged the admiration and excited the wonder of scholars, ecclesiastic and secular, for centuries, was built by Seibert, in the form of a chapel, in the seventh century. It was erected in honor of St. Peter on a slightly elevated spot rising from the marshy ground bordering the Thames. A church of greater proportions was erected on the spot by King Edward about the year 980. That structure being partly demolished by the Danes Edward the Confessor founded within the precincts of his palace an abbey and church in the Norman style, which was completed in 1065, and of which there now only remains the pyx house to the south of the abbey, the substructure of the dormitory and the south side of the cloisters. The rebuilding of the church was commenced by Henry III. in 1220. At that time were erected the choir and transepts and a lady chapel, which was subsequently removed to make way for the chapel of Henry VII. The building was practically completed by Edward I., but the greater part of the nave in the transition style and various other improvements were added, down to the time of Henry VII., including the west end of the nave, the deanery, portions of the cloisters and the Jerusalem chambers. The two towers at the west end were erected by Wren. The length of the church, including Henry VII.'s chapel, is 511 feet, and the extreme breadth 203 feet. The height of the nave is 102 feet and of the towers 225 feet. On approaching Victoria street from Parliament street the buttresses and pinnacles and the whole expanse of the abbey gradually open to view. The British sovereigns from Edward the Confessor, whose coronation occurred in 1042, to Victoria, 1838, have been crowned in Westminster Abbey, and many of them are buried there, some with and others without monuments. In the south transept, in and near Poet's Corner, are monuments to most of the great poets of the country, and here, as well as in both aisles of the nave and choir, are monuments to other illustrious Englishmen. The interior of the cathedral is as magnificent as the outside is imposing.

NATURE'S WORK OF ART.

The Face of Washington Carved in Living Rock.

Carved by nature in the rough stone of Marblehead Neck, the calm face of George Washington gazes out over the waste of waters. In this quiet, secluded corner of Massachusetts this remarkable monument remained for ages undiscovered until Albert Chapman, of Marblehead, cropped the bushes and weeds which grew about its base in rank luxuriance, disclosing the stone features which bear a most striking resemblance to the Father of his Country. Some call it the "Old Man of the Sea," but the majority of Marblehead citizens trace in its lines and curves a counterfeit of the loved face of the first president.

The face is formed by three rocks, one forming the forehead, one the chin and the other the nose. The face rests upon a slightly elevated knoll, at an angle, as if the great general in effigy were taking his repose and languidly gazing out to sea. The George Washington stone will henceforth be one of the many objects of patriotic pilgrimage on the coast of the Bay State.—New York Press.

Let It Alone.

There is a story told of a very eminent lawyer, now no longer with us, who once, while endeavoring to dissuade a friend of mine from going to law, was asked what he would himself consider a sufficient ground for resorting to litigation.

"My dear fellow," he replied, "I do not say that under no conceivable circstances would I take proceedings against anyone, but I do say that if at this moment you deliberately upset my ink on the tablecloth, chucked my wife out of the window, threw that volume of reports at the bust of Blackstone, 'made hay' with my furniture, and finally tweaked my nose, I should no doubt use my best endeavors to kick you down stairs; but, once rid of you, either by force or persuasion, no power on earth should induce me to bring an action against you."

A STRANGE FISH.

Caught by the Crew of the Albatross at a Depth of Two Miles.

United States Fish Commissioner N. B. Miller, in charge of the ship Albatross, says in regard to the strange fish captured on the last cruise:

"The queer fish that we got, the like of which has never been seen before, was twenty-six inches long and weighed between eight and nine pounds. It was taken at a point about 100 miles southwest of the Prybilof Islands, at a depth of 1,700 fathoms. It resembled the fish known as the macrurus, but still was essentially different from anything before discovered. Its head was peculiarly flat in appearance; its eyes very large, and its tail dwindling to a point and being curled in action something like that of a snake.

"It was physically constructed so that it could only live at this great depth in the ocean, where the weight of the water was so great that it would kill all other animal life. When the fish was drawn up its stomach was crushed up out of its mouth, and its eyes were puffed out. It could not live in the upper waters. In its native depths the darkness was so dense that no other fish could see anything. It was also as cold as in the Arctic regions.

He Wanted the Watch.

A young English barrister in Africa was once retained to defend a Zulu charged with stealing a gold watch. The evidence was entirely circumstantial, and the lawyer made such a good defense that his client was discharged. The same evening he was sitting with the magistrate on the porch of the hotel, when the Zulu came up and said in English:

"Master, can I wear the watch now?" pulling out the stolen article at the same time.

The magistrate roared with laughter, and the young advocate was somewhat confused.—New York Mail and Express.

It takes a man half his life to learn that he is just an ordinary plug, and not a genius.

The forged letter affair still contnues. This week a Mason Valley rancher brought fourteen hogs to Bodie on an order supposed to be from Mrs. Jas. Perry, and N. Polli came up with nine quarters of beef and a ton of potatoes for Joe Vesra. Both parties to whom the meat was sent claim that they did not order it. While such work is allowed to go on in a civilized community it will place more or less suspicion on many innocent and disinterested parties. Shall the public stand such nonsence? The guilty whether they be men or women, should be ferreted out and punished. Of all the damnable impositions on a community this is the worst, and the longer we put up with it, the longer we may expect to be imposed upon—and the longer we should be. Whoever is engaging in this work no doubt think they are cunning, but to catch them is a very simple trick. There is not a person in town, a copy of whose natural hand writing could not be obtained. Submit the forged letters and copies of the handwriting of those most suspicioned to an expert on penmanship and it will soon be brought to light who is doing this dastardly work. It is an injury to the community to allow such. Those getting tricked could of right give Bodie a pretty tough name. Every person here in the habit of ordering anything by mail had better use a private mark placed in their letters, and have those from whom they buy not to send anything unless they find the mark agreed upon.—[Bodi Miner, of Feb. 1st

A bill has been introduced in the Kentucky Legislature by senator Goebel to repeal the charter of the Southern Pacific Railway company, obtained in 1884 by C. P. Huntington. The road has never been operated in Kentucky, but in California, and the action of the Senator is prompted by resolutions of mass meetings of California. Senator Goebel says C. P. Huntington got the law passed for this charter twelve years ago, and that the road has never been built and operated in Kentcky but in this State. The people of the State have sent memorials to the Kentucky Legislature asking that body to wipe out the charter of that road.

Florida is importing large quantities of California oranges and lemons, and is asking for California olives. Florida has no citrus fruit to speak of at present, and the product of this State is imported to supply the demands of northern people who are spending the winter in Florida. One large hotel in St. Agustine takes a carload of oranges each week. This is like carrying coals to Newcastle, but it is freak in commerce that California does not object to.

Secretary Carlisle the Director of the Mint has sent orders to the Superintendents of the mints at Philadelphia, New Orleans and San Francisco to resume the coinage of silver dollars from the bullion purchased under the act of 1890. The monthly coinage of standard dollars is limited until further orders to 1,500,000, divided between the three mints as follows: Philadelphia, $900,000; New Orleans, $500,000; San Francisco, $100,000.

The Supreme Court of the United States now have the Wright irrigation law under advisement, and a decision may be expected some time in the near future. The best lawyers in the country appeared both for and against the law, and the court have all the light that could be thrown upon the subject. It is gratifying to know that an end will be put to litigation over the law.

It is asserted by Los Angeles papers that the real estate transfers of that city last year exceeded those of San Francisco by 1443, and that the value of the Los Angeles sales wern nearly $4,005,000 greater than those of the city by the bay. Competing railroads and one-lunged eastern tourists seem to exercise a big influence for good down in the southern matropolis.

An editorial in an eastern publication says: "Over in Germany they have invented a photographic apparatus that a picture of a man's—even to the marrow. We want one. We want to take one good look at the internal fixin's of the man who will take a paper five years on credit and at last return it to the office marked 'refused.'"

How does it happen that beef cattle from the head of the Sacramento in California are being shipped to Omaha, while beef cattle from the eastern part of Nevada are being shipped to San Francisco? Cattle from California going east and cattle from Nevada going west are unloaded here to feed and rest.—[Reno Journal.

Japan will invest the whole of the 200,000,000 teals of silver received from China in battleships and coast fortifications. The year 1895 opened promisingly for the peace socities, but the tide now is running strongly in the opposite direction.

The Reno Journal says: A capitalist was in Reno this week looking into the proposition of starting a beet sugar factory at that point. It is probable that the scheme will be carried out during the summer.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o'clock, a. m., on Thursday, April 9, 1896, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County for the term of one year beglonning May 10, 1896, and ending May 9, 1897.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sick properly admitted to contractor's care, on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said Ninth day of April, 1896, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Dips, Spurs And Angles From Southern Inyo.

No strange or startling news to speak of or write about, the strong north wind of the past week having blown them all towards Mojave

Bolands ore wagon to Cerro Gordo is laid up for repairs this week, therefore the mail carrying act is being done by E. M. Huntley and other miners from the hill. Operations are at a stand still almost, on account of the cold weather and freezing up of water pipes.

McLean and McSweeny lost a valuable horse at Darwin last Monday. It appeared to have gone totally blind and was unable to stand up.

Messrs Goldthwaid and Ross of Los Angeles have a pretty good prospect up near Cerro Gordo and it looks very well at a depth of ten feet. Frank Wrinkler also has a good showing of lead ore and he is sinking on it and says there is nearly two feet of ore in the bottom of the shaft.

J. Dunphy and his nephew, H. Dunphy came down from Cerro Gordo Thursday evening and may remain for a short time in Keeler. Dunphy is feeling much better. The packers are packing a car load of ore for him and he will probably ship a car next week.

J. D. Low and J. Driscoll went up to the Reward mine at Francis station last week to go to work in the mine for Supt. Rives.

Mrs. Geo. T Rives was one of the passengers on Fridays stage last week en route to southern California.

Arthur Smith is in Keeler again and may go to Cerro Gordo as soon as the werther moderates again.

W. T. Grant of Olancha drove in from there Thursday and telegraphed for Dr. Woodin to go to Olancha at once to see Miss Lottie Walker who is quite sick with lung trouble or pleurisy. Mr Grant says there has been an unusual lot of sickness at Olancha this winter but all are on the improve at present.

Geo. D. Calvert of Tibbetts station came down Wednesday as extra brakeman in place of the regular man Barnes, who takes Conductor Stocks place for a while, while he is away on a prospecting trip. "Al" thinks of giving up ranching this year and trying mining for a change. Here's luck to him and wishing he may find the biggest mine in Inyo County.

Improvements seem to be the order of the day in and around Keeler. The main street railroad avenue is being leveled off by scrapers and rollers in front of Boland's property, between that and the railroad depot and when the railroad company fills in the same with good gravel it will be a number one street. If all the owners of property will help to level off in front of their property facing the track there is no doubt but that the company would furnish gravel to cover it all in first class order free of charge.

J. J. Gunn went to Modock on Monday. R. S. Slacke went to Lone Pine Tuesday. Theo. Wibbelt came up from his mines at Mountain springs last week and returned again last Saturday. He brought up nearly three ounces of gold for shipment to San Francisco.

Some mining men came up on last week's stage and went on through to Soda Springs to inspect the gold mines there

Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle is expected back on Friday on a visit to Keeler.

Yours hastily,
LEAP YEAR.

To The Teachers.

LONE PINE, February 5, 1896.

TO THE TEACHERS:—While making my annual visit to your schools this year I desire to obtain the opinions and suggestions of each member of our little band of teachers on the following points:

1st. Course of Study. The Board of Education will probably publish the Course in permanent shape this year, and it desires to obtain the results of your experience with the Course during the current year before making any changes. As this is the year for the readoption of text books any suggestion in regard to new text books will also be appreciated.

2nd. Examinations for Graduation. Each teacher having eighth year pupils is requested to send me at least five sample questions on each topic. By aid of these questions taken from your daily work, the examiners will prepare a uniform set of questions for the County.

3rd. Promoting Pupils—I would be pleased to know what basis or standard is taken by each teacher in grading and promoting pupils. Would you like to have printed promotion cards?

4th. Library List. Our Library and supplementary lists will be re-arranged and printed this year. I desire suggestions in regard to books, charts, apparatus etc.

5th. Teachers Reference Library. In ordering books for our Teachers Library I desire to select those which will be most helpful to you—Any standard book, therefore, which you desire to see in our Professional Library will be placed a line for the next order.

Yours Respectfully,
S. W. AUSTIN,
County Supt.

Liberty Suiprise Party.

On last Friday night a company of friends and neighbors numbering thirty-two, gathered at the residence of Mrs. Putman, formed a procession and went to the house of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bell and gave them a surpise in the shape of a house warming. On approaching their house, the company began playing "Home Sweet Home." We were cordially welcomed by them and the evening was pleasently spent with games and songs. An excellent supper was served by the ladies of the party. Thanks to them. A. P.

Ment on

The following editorial mention is taken from The Advance in Education, edited by Prof. P. W. Search, of Los Angeles. It will be remembered that Prof. Search spent the week with us last November during the annual meeting of the Teacher's Institute, and delivered several very interesting lectures:

The editor, as lecturer and instructor, has recently attended a remarkable institute in Inyo County. Shut in from the rest of the world by twenty-four hours of stage ride, Independence lies at the base of Mt. Whitney, as delightful as it is in accessible. Think of audiences numbering four hundred people in a village of half that size, where indeed the local school contained only only thirty-eight children! Think of persons coming thirty and forty miles to an evening lecture; and then you have some idea of the interest in this enterprising valley that is necessarily a little world to itself, but from within and without has caught a spirit of culture that would do honor to the Hub itself. S. W. Austin is one of the most progressive county superintendents of California, while his co-working teachers, from the leading colleges and normal schools, are among the best. California has much of promise when such communities exist to do her credit. The Editor has never attended a more interesting institute.

Clippings From Blackrock.

Mr. David Rogers has been laid up with the toothache the past week.

Mrs. Conklin took her little daughter to Independence Friday, for medical treatment.

We received a pleasant call on Saturday, from Supt. S. W. Austin. After inspecting our new school house, he pronounced it the finest school room in the county.

Contractor C. H. Prahm completed the new school house on Tuesday, and on Wednesday turned it over to the Trustees. It is a first-class building in every particular, and the Taboose District may well feel proud of it. None but first class material was used in its construction, and the work is above criticism. School will begin therein next Monday. NONPAREIL.

Got Bilked.

James Smart was in from Mason Valley this week. He recently lost his house and contents by fire, but having it insured for $2,500 felt as though he would come somewhere near even on his loss this time. But when he came to settle with the insrance, or they with him, they cut him down to $1,600. Smart settled for this amount rather than have a lawsuit that would keep him out of all the insurance for same time, besides being an expensive proceeding. There is not a court or jury in the State, however, but which would have awarded him the entire amount for which the property was insured.—Dayton Times.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE.

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR," "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE," ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

"How do you think the Armours will receive her?" said Lambert to Mrs. Townley, of whose judgment on short acquaintance he had come to entertain a high opinion.

Mrs. Townley had a pretty way of putting her head to one side and speaking very piquantly. She had had it as a girl. She had not lost it as a woman, any more than she had lost a soft little spontaneous laugh which was one of her unusual charms, for few women can laugh audibly with effect. She laughed very softly now, and her sense of humor supervening for the moment she said: "Really you have asked me a conundrum. I fancy I see Mrs. Armour's face when she gets the news—at the breakfast table, of course—and gives a little shriek, and says, 'General, oh, general!' But it is all very shocking, you know," she added in a lower voice. "Still I think they will receive her and do the best they can for her, because, you see, there she is married hard and fast. She bears the Armour name and is likely to make them all very unhappy indeed if she determines to retaliate upon them for any neglect."

"Yes? But how to retaliate, Mrs Townley?" Lambert had not a suggestive mind.

"Well, for instance, suppose they sent her away into seclusion—with Frank's consent, another serious question—and she should take the notion to fly her retirement and appear inopportunely at some social function clothed as she is now. I fancy her blanket would be a wet blanket in such a case, if you will pardon the little joke."

Lambert sighed. "Poor Frank! Poor devil!" he said almost beneath his breath.

"And wherefore poor Frank? Do you think he or the Armours of Greyhope are the only ones at stake in this? What about this poor girl? Just think why he married her, if our suspicions are right, and then imagine her feelings when she wakes to the truth over there, as some time she is sure to do!"

Then Lambert began to see the matter in a different light, and his sympathy for Francis Armour grew less as his pity for the girl increased. In fact, the day before they got to Southampton he swore at Armour more than once and was anxious concerning the reception of tthe heathen wife by her white relatives.

Had he been present at a certain scene at Greyhope a day or two before he would have been still more anxious. It was the custom at breakfast for Mrs. Armour to open her husband's letters and read them while he was engaged with his newspaper and hand to him afterward those that were important. This morning Marion noticed a letter from Frank among the pile and without a word pounced upon it. She was curious, as any woman would be, to see how he took Miss Sherwood's action. Her father was deep in his paper at the time. Her mother was reading other letters. Marion read the first few lines with a feeling of almost painful wonder, the words were so curious, cynical and cold.

Richard sat opposite her. He also was engaged with his paper, but chancing to glance up saw that she was becoming very pale and that the letter trembled in her fingers. Being a little short sighted, he was not near enough to see the handwriting. He did not speak yet. He watched. Presently, seeing her grow more excited, he touched her foot under the table. She looked up and caught his eye. She gasped slightly. She gave him a warning look and turned away from her mother. Then she went on reading to the bitter end. Presently a little cry escaped her against her will. At that her mother looked up, but she only saw her daughter's back, as she rose hurriedly from the table, saying that she would return in a moment. Mrs. Armour, however, had been startled. She knew that Marion had been reading a letter, and with a mother's instinct her thoughts were instantly on Frank. She spoke quickly, almost sharply, "Marion, come here."

Richard had risen. He came round the table, and as the girl obeyed her mother took the letter from her fingers and hastily glanced over it. Mrs. Armour came forward and took her daughter's arm. "Marion," she said, "there is something wrong—with Frank. What is it?"

General Armour was now looking up at them all curiously, questioningly, through his glasses, his paper laid down, his hands resting on the table.

Marion could not answer. She was sick with regret, vexation and shame. At the first flush death—for Frank—had been preferable to this. She had considerable store of vanity. She was not very philosophical. Besides she was not married, and what Captain Vidall, her devoted admirer and possible husband, would think of this heathenish alliance was not a cheerful thought to her.

She choked down a sob and waved her hand toward Richard to answer for her. He was pale, too, but cool. He understood the case instantly. He made up his mind instantly also as to what ought to be—must be—done.

"Well, mother," he said, "it is about Frank. But he is all right—that is, he is alive and well in body. But he has arranged a hateful little embarrassment for us. He is married."

"Married!" said his mother faintly. "Oh, poor Lady Agnes!"

Marion sniffed a little viciously at this.

"Married! Married!" said his father. "Well, what about it, eh? What about it?"

The mother wrung her hands. "Oh, I know it is something dreadful—dreadful! He has married some horrible wild person or something."

Richard, miserable as he was, remained calm. "Well," said he, "I don't know about her being horrible. Frank is silent on that point, but she is wild enough—a wild Indian, in fact."

"Indian! Indian! Good God, a red nigger!" cried General Armour harshly, starting to his feet.

"An Indian! A wild Indian!" Mrs. Armour whispered faintly as she dropped into a chair.

"And she'll be here in two or three days!" fluttered Marion hysterically.

Meanwhile Richard had hastily picked up The Times. "She is due here the day after tomorrow," he said deliberately. "Frank is as decisive as he is rash. Well, it is a melancholy tit for tat."

"What do you mean by tit for tat?" cried his father angrily.

"Oh, I mean that—that we tried to hasten Julia's marriage with the other fellow, and he is giving us one in return, and you will all agree that it's a pretty permanent one."

The old soldier recovered himself and was beside his wife in an instant. He took her hand. "Don't fret about it, wife," he said. "It's an ugly business, but we must put up with it. The boy was out of his head. We are old now, my dear, but there was a time when we should have resented such a thing as much as Frank, though not in the same fashion perhaps—not in the same fashion." The old man pressed his lips hard to keep down his emotion.

"Oh, how could he, how could he!" said his mother. "We meant everything for the best."

"It is always dangerous business meddling with lovers' affairs," rejoined Richard. "Lovers take themselves very seriously indeed, and—well, here the thing is. Now, who will go and fetch her from Liverpool? I should say that both my father and my mother ought to go."

Thus Richard took it for granted that they would receive Frank's Indian wife into their home. He intended that, so far as he was concerned, there should be no doubt upon the question from the beginning.

"Never! She shall never come here!" said Marion with flashing eyes. "A common squaw, with greasy hair and blankets and big mouth and black teeth, who eats with her fingers and grunts! If she does, if she is brought to Greyhope, I will never show my face in the world again. Frank married the animal. Why does he ship her home to us? Why didn't he come with her? Why does he not take her to a home of his own and not send her here to turn our house into a menagerie?"

Marion drew her skirt back, as if the common squaw, with her blankets and grease, was at that moment near her.

"Well, you see," continued Richard, "that is just it. As I said, Frank arranged this little complication with a trifling amount of malice. No doubt he didn't come with her because he wished to test the family loyalty and hospitality, but a postscript to his letter says that his solicitor has instructions to meet his wife at Liverpool and bring her on here in case we fail to show her proper courtesy."

General Armour here spoke. "He has carried the war of retaliation very far indeed, but men do mad things when their blood is up, as I have seen often. That doesn't alter our clear duty in the matter. If the woman were bad or shameful, it would be a different thing. If"——

Marion interrupted, "She has ridden bareback across the continent like a jockey—like a common jockey—and she wears a blanket, and she doesn't know a word of English, and she will sit on the floor."

"Well," said her father, "all these things are not sins, and she must be taught better."

"Joseph, how can you?" said Mrs. Armour indignantly. "She cannot—she shall not come here. Think of Marion! Think of our position!" She hid her troubled tear stained face behind her handkerchief. At the same time she grasped her husband's hand. She knew that he was right. She honored him in her heart for the position he had taken, but she could not resist the natural impulse of a woman where her taste and convention were shocked.

The old man was very pale, but there was no mistaking his determination. He had been more indignant than any of them at first, but he had an unusual sense of justice when he got face to face with it, as Richard had here helped him to do. "We do not know that the woman has done any wrong," he said. "As for our name and position, they, thank God, are where a mad marriage cannot unseat them. We have had much prosperity in the world, my wife. We have had neither death nor dishonor. We"——

"If this isn't dishonor, father, what is?" Marion flashed out.

He answered calmly: "My daughter, it is a great misfortune. It will probably be a lifelong trail, but it is not necessarily dishonor."

"You never can make a scandal less by trying to hide it," said Richard, backing up his father. "It is all pretty awkward, but I dare say we shall get some amusement out of it in the end."

"Richard," said his mother through her tears, "you are flippant and unkind."

"Indeed, mother," was his reply, "I never was more serious in my life. When I spoke of amusement, I meant comedy merely, not fun—the thing that looks like tragedy and has a happy ending. That is what I mean, mother, nothing more."

"You are always so very deep, Richard," remarked Marion ironically, "and care so very little how the rest of us feel about things. You have no family pride. If you had married a squaw, we shouldn't have been surprised. You could have camped in the grounds with your wild woman and never have been missed—by the world," she hastened to add, for she saw a sudden pain in his face.

He turned from them all a little wearily and limped over to the window. He stood there looking out into the limes where he and Frank had played when boys. He put his finger up, his unhandsome finger, and caught away some moisture from his eyes. He did not dare to let them see his face nor yet to speak. Marion had cut deeper than she knew, and he would carry the wound for many a day before it healed.

But his sister felt instantly how cruel she had been as she saw him limp away and caught sight of the bowed shoulders and prematurely gray hair. Her heart smote her. She ran over and impulsively put her hands on his shoulder. "Oh, Dick," she said, "forgive me, Dick! I didn't mean it. I was angry and foolish and hateful."

He took one of her hands as it rested on his shoulder, she standing partly behind him, and raised it to his lips, but he did not turn to her; he could not.

"It is all right; it is all right," he said. "It doesn't make any difference. Let us think of Frank and what we have got to do. Let us stand together, Marion. That is best."

But her tears were dropping on his shoulder as her forehead rested on her hand. He knew now that whatever Frank's wife was she would not have an absolute enemy here, for when Marion cried her heart was soft. She was clay in the hands of the potter whom we call Mercy—more often a stranger to the hearts of women than men. At the other side of the room also the father and mother, tearless now, watched these two, and the mother saw her duty better and with less rebelliousness. She had felt it from the first, but she could not bring her mind to do it. They held each other's hands in silence. Presently General Armour said, "Richard, your mother and I will go to Liverpool to meet our son's wife."

Marion shuddered a little, and her hands closed on Richard's shoulder, but she said nothing.

CHAPTER III.

It was a beautiful day, which was so much in favor of Mrs. Frank Armour in relation to her husband's people. General Armour and his wife had come down from London by the latest train possible that their suspense at Liverpool might be short. They said little to each other, but when they did speak it was of things very different from the skeleton which they expected to put into the family cupboard presently. Each was trying to spare the other. It was very touching. They naturally looked upon the matter in its most unpromising light because an Indian was an Indian, and this unknown savage from Fort Charles was in violent contrast to such desirable persons as Lady Agnes Martling. Not that the Armours were zealous for mere money and title, but the thing itself was altogether apropos, as Mrs. Armour had more naively than correctly put it. The general, whose knowledge of character and the circumstances of life was considerable, had worked out the thing with much accuracy. He had declared to Richard in their quiet talk upon the subject that Frank must have been anything but sober when he did it. He had previously called it a policy of retaliation, so that now he was very near the truth. When they arrived at the dock at Liverpool, the Aphrodite was just making into the harbor.

"Egad," said General Armour to himself, "Sevastopol was easier than this, for fighting I know and being peppered I know by Jews, Greeks, infidels and heretics, but to take a savage to my arms and do for her what her godfathers and godmothers never did is worse than the devil's dance at Delhi."

What Mrs. Armour, who was not quite so definite as her husband, thought it would be hard to tell, but probably grief for and indignation at her son were uppermost in her mind. She had quite determined upon her course. None could carry better that high neutral look of social superiority than she.

Please heaven, she said to herself, no one should see that her equanimity was shaken. They had brought one servant with them, who had been gravely and yet conventionally informed that his young master's wife, an Indian chieftainess, was expected. There are few family troubles but find their way to servants' hall with an uncomfortable speed, for, whether or not stone walls have ears, certainly menservants and maidservants have eyes that serve for ears and ears that do more than their bounden duty. Boulter, the footman, knew his business. When informed of the coming of Mrs. Francis Armour, the Indian chieftainess, his face was absolutely expressionless. His "Yessir" was as mechanical as usual. On the dock he was marble—indifferent. When the passengers began to land, he showed no excitement. He was decorously alert. When the crucial moment came, he was imperturbable. Boulter was an excellent servant. So said Edward Lambert to himself after the event; so likewise said Mrs. Townley to herself when the thing was over; so declared General Armour many a time after and once very emphatically just before he raised Boulter's wages.

As the boat neared Liverpool Lambert and Mrs. Townley had grown very nervous. The truth regarding the Indian wife had become known among the passengers, and most were very curious—some in well bred fashion, some intrusively, vulgarly. Mackenzie, Lali's companion, like Boulter, was expressionless in face. She had her duty to do, paid for liberally, and she would do it. Lali might have had a more presentable and dignified attendant, but not one more worthy. It was noticeable that the captain of the ship and all the officers had been markedly courteous to Mrs. Armour throughout the voyage, but, to their credit, not ostentatiously so. When the vessel was brought to anchor and the passengers were being put upon the tender, the captain came and made his respectful adieus, as though Lali were a lady of title in her own right and not an Indian girl married to a man acting under the influence of brandy and malice. General Armour and Mrs. Armour were always grateful to Edward Lambert and Mrs. Townley for the part they played in this desperate little comedy. They stood still and watchful as the passengers came ashore one by one. They saw they were the center of unusual interest, but General Armour was used to bearing himself with a grim kind of indifference in public, and his wife was calm, and so somewhat disappointed those who probably expected the old officer and his wife to be distressed. Frank Armour's solicitor was also there; but, with good taste, he held aloof. The two needed all their courage, however, when they saw a figure in buckskin and blanket step upon the deck, attended by a very ordinary, austere and shabbily dressed Scotswoman. But immediately behind them were Edward Lambert and Mrs. Townley, and these, with their simple tact, naturalness and freedom from any sort of embarrassment, acted as foils and relieved the situation.

NEW EPISCOPAL BISHOP.

Bishop Elect Satterlee Has Twice Declined Similar Honors.

Rev. H. Y. Satterlee of Calvary church, New York city, has been elected bishop of the new Episcopal diocese of Washington. This is viewed as a compromise choice between high church and low church candidates. Dr. McKim of Washington was looked upon before the convention as the man who would be chosen, but he was defeated by the high church faction, whose favorite candidate was Rev. Morgan Dix. Dr. Satterlee is not regarded as a representative of either wing of the church. He is generally spoken of as an exponent of "broad church" principles.

The new diocese over which Dr. Satterlee has been selected to preside has just been created. It comprises the city of Washington and four of the southern counties of Maryland. The new bishop will have his headquarters in Washington. His salary is to be $7,000 a year, but this will soon be increased, it is promised.

The Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee will make an imposing figure in a bishop's robes, as his person is tall and commanding. He is 52 years old and a native of New York city. He was graduated at Columbia college and from the General Theological seminary. His first appointment was as assistant rector of the Episcopal church at Wappinger Falls, N. Y. He subsequently became rector and was called to the pulpit of Calvary church in 1882. About this time the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon him by Union college. In 1888 he was elected assistant bishop of Ohio, and in 1889 he was elected bishop of Michigan, but he declined both honors.

Dr. Satterlee has been a prominent figure in the Episcopal church for several years. He has been most actively interested in the Episcopal church congress, the parochial missions, the temperance movement and in home and foreign missionary work. He is an eloquent speaker, a writer of no mean ability and an energetic organizer. He was not a candidate for bishop and was surprised when notified of his election.

Philadelphia's Ancient Lockup.

An old English dungeon has been brought to light by the tearing down of a building in the rear of a pickle factory on Spruce street, below Second. The building is thought to have been more than 300 years old. Every brick in it was brought from England, and the building was once the pride of the little colony that lived here. It was originally, it is said, the courthouse of the settlement, and underneath the ground were those dungeons or cells in which prisoners were kept. It is supposed that the cells were used as temporary places of confinement, and not for prisoners serving long terms, much the same as the "lockups" or station houses of today. The bricks are as solid as in the days of old and will be used again in another building. The old house has been burned out several times, but the walls were never damaged much. The whole neighborhood is an interesting one. The building adjoining the one torn down has a fourth floor, which is windowless. Instead of the usual windows it has portholes, slanting downward, from which, "in days of old, when knights were bold," men probably picked off prowling Indians or enemies of some kind.—Philadelphia Press.

Sterne's Plagiarisms.

The following instance of Sterne's unblushing "conveying" has not, I think, been hitherto recorded. In "Tristram Shandy," volume 1, chapter 12, is the following well known passage:

"When to gratify a private appetite, it is once resolved upon that an innocent and a helpless creature shall be sacrificed, 'tis an easy matter to pick up sticks enough from any thicket where it has strayed to make a fire to offer it up with."

In the introduction to "Baconiana," London, 1679, T. T.—i. e., Dr. Thomas Tenison, in comment on Bacon's words to King James, "I wish that as I am the first, so I may be the last of sacrifices in your times," writes as follows (page 16):

"And when from private Appetite, it is resolv'd that a Creature shall be sacrificed; it is easie to pick up sticks enough, from any Thicket whither it hath straied, to make a Fire to offer it with."

There could not be a more audacious example of literary theft.—Notes and Queries.

Agriculture In Great Britain.

The fact that agriculture is in process of gradual abandonment in Great Britain may account in part for the increase in immigration from that country, the number of arrivals since August aggregating 238,000. It evidently does not pay the British farmer to raise wheat on high priced British land. The next problem is to make this land profitable in some other way. The decline in wheat acreage this year is 26 per cent less than 1894. This indicates that upward of 200,000 acres of land have failed of cultivation because agriculture no longer pays.—Philadelphia Times.

A Living Shadow.

REMARKABLE TRANSFORMATION OF A NORTH CAROLINA MAN.

Strange, but True, Story from the Lumber Regions of a Southern State—Verified by Personal Investigation.

(From the Greenville, N. C., Reflector.)

The following interview has just been given our reporter by Mr. G. A. Baker, the overseer at the farm of Col. Isaac A. Sugg, of Greenville, N. C. It will interest anyone who has ever had Typhoid fever. Mr. Baker said in part:

"I was living in Beaufort county, and on the 2d day of October, 1893, I was stricken down with typhoid fever. I had the best physicians to attend me and on the 15th day of January, 1894, I was allowed to get up. I was emaciated, weak, and had no appetite. I could only drag along for a short distance and would be compelled to sit down and rest. This continued for some time and I began to give up hope of ever getting well. I lost my position in Beaufort county and having secured one in Pitt county, clerking in a store, I undertook it, but was so weak I could not do the work and had to give it up. The disease settled in my knees, legs and feet. I was taking first one kind of medicine and then another, but nothing did me any good. I was mighty low-spirited. I moved out to Col. Sugg's about four or five months ago and commenced taking Dr. Williams' Pills. I took three a day for about three months. I began to regain my appetite in a week's time, and then my weakness beagn to disappear, and hope sprung up with a blessedness that is beyond all telling. At the expiration of the three months I was entirely cured and could take my axe and go in the woods and do as good a day's work as any man. I was troubled with dyspepsia and that has disappeared. It is also a splendid tonic for weak people. I say, Mr. Editor, God bless Dr. Williams; may he live for a long time; I know he will go up yonder to reap his reward for he has done a wonderful lot of good. Tell everybody that asks you about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People that if they will come to me I can certainly satisfy them as to their merits. I always carry a box of pills with me and whenever I feel bad I take one."

We were forcibly struck with the earnestness of Mr. Baker and his statements may be relied on.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Strong Brains.

A mild bit of repartee is reported as having occurred between the poet Saxe and Oliver Wendell Holmes. They were talking about brain fever when Mr. Saxe remarked:

"I once had a severe attack of brain fever myself."

"How could you have brain fever?" asked Dr. Holmes, smiling. "It is only strong brains that have brain fever."

"How did you find that out?" asked Saxe.—Youth's Companion.

"THE MELANCHOLY DAYS

Have come, the saddest of the year," not when autumn has arrived, as poet Bryant intimates, but when a fellow gets bilious. The "sere and yellow leaf" is in his complexion if not in the foliage at that inauspicious time. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will soon disipline his rebellious liver, and regulate his bowels, besides toning his stomach and healthfully stimulating his kidneys. Malaria, rheumatism and nervousness are also relieved by the Bitters.

TIME AND TIDE.

"Time and tide wait for no man" saith the adage—but there are many other things of the non-waiting kind which will not be put off and ought not to be. Half the misery of the world is caused by delay, and Rheumatism is one of those insidious ills which demands prompt attention, especially in mid-winter, when the cold accelerates its action and intensifies pain. If allowed to have its way, it will wait for no man in its rapid development of the chronic stage. When this is reached, then come troubles, not only in its misery but in many ways where a helpless condition throws the sufferer out of work and money. But whether in its acute, chronic or inflammatory stage, don't wait. The tide of pain will go on and so will loss of time. At the same time we all know that St. Jacobs Oil is made and sold for the express purpose of curing the worst cases in their worst form at any stage. It has cured and will cure in nine cases out of ten.

He—Trudchen, dear, this kiss tells you all I have to say. Have you understood me? She—Oh, please, say it again.

CATARRH CANNOT BE CURED

With local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

A CHILD OF EARTH.

I come to claim my heritage,
O Mother Earth, of thee,
Thou mother strong from toil and age
And rich in majesty!
I claim those faroff cedar boughs,
The tresses on thy mountain brows,
For me against the evening sky
Those somber trees rise dim and high,
Yet think not by my hand shall fall
A single trunk among them all.

I claim this quiet, lonely lake,
Some Titan's only tear,
Where crushing down the fern and brake
Stoops low the drinking deer.
Yet never shall my noisy oar
Push out from its untrodden shore;
Here, hidden close in nature's eye,
Serene, unhaunted, let it lie.
Here may the heron plash and scream,
And here the redbird's plumage gleam.

I claim the forest and the gales
That swing their ponderous scythes,
The sea when flecked with swanlike sails,
Or when it foams and writhes.
I claim the heather purpled hills,
The silvery tongues of snow fed rills—
All, all are mine. I need but roll
The curtain from before my soul,
More richly blest, that all may share
My sacred rights in earth and air.

A TALE OF ALSACE.

The carriage was going at a terrific pace. The horses, unusually excited by the white wine that had been poured over their oats, dashed through the air which whistled past their ears. Their hoofs resounded loudly on the hard frozen road. The two carriage lanterns shone in the night like the glowing eyes of some huge, prehistoric monster.

This mad, furious course in the darkness had something strange about it, something mysterious, sinister, and all the more so, perhaps, that it was taking place in the annee terrible—the terrible year when the Germans were in Alsace.

The carriage, like a vessel in distress on a raging sea, oscillated from left to right and from right to left.

When the vehicle, which had been flying down the slopes of Ottrot, raced through the village, passing like an express train the houses with their little low roofs on which the moon cast a silvery light, the good women, suddenly frightened, made the sign of the cross with a trembling of the knees and a whispered prayer.

"Mon Dieu! What is going to become of us?"

The children crouched, terrified, against the knee of the older persons. Everywhere there was a sense of depression and evil presentiment and—a characteristic sign of general terror—the fires in the huge, white stoves were allowed to sink low and go out, for no one thought of keeping them alive.

The fact was the Prussians for several weeks past had been cruelly ravaging the country.

The flying carriage contained some German officers who were the bearers of secret orders to S.

"Faster, faster," they cried, whipping up the poor horses, which were already breathing fire and smoke out of their nostrils. The wretched driver, terrified, obeyed mechanically.

"Tonnerre!" he growled, "my horses will die when they reach their stable if they do not break their necks going round one of these steep curves!" And the strokes of the whip redoubled, and the dizzy course became still more reckless.

The trees seemed to fly past. Nature herself protested against the wild, headlong career, for at this moment the moon hid her face behind a cloud, as if she did not wish to be a witness to the scene. And still they flew onward.

* * * * * *

That afternoon the enemy had taken possession of the village of Ottrot, and, as their custom was, had installed themselves in the people's houses.

Four superior officers were domiciled with the mayor. They sat there in the middle of his best drawing room, talking loudly in thei gutteral jargon and smoking their long pipes of porcelain while they dried their boots at the hot fire blazing in the grate.

Their unwilling host, a tall old man, with a white beard, served them with drinks as graciously as he could. His eye passed sadly from one to the other, his venerable head shaking melancholily, as if to say: "It is the right of the strongest. What can one do against a hundred?"

Perhaps his mind was dwelling on the past. Perhaps he was looking forward to revenge, thinking, it may be, of the time when his countrymen, by one of those spontaneous movements that the French alone are capable of, would be victorious and offering mercy to these very officers, his guests.

He raised his white head in a gesture of defiance, and his eyes shot fire. He seemed to have grown 20 years younger, and this transfiguration was evidence of his tremendous internal agitation.

He was recalled to the present by a gentle knock at the door, and almost immediately afterward he saw in the porch the tall, powerful frame of Lux, who was the foreman of the mayor's servants and a modern Hercules. He was agile as a deer and strong as an ox and could break a sou between his fingers as he would break an eggshell.

The neck of a bull rose out of a flannel shirt, carelessly fastened across the throat by a cotton necktie. He was a man terrible in anger, but in repose gentle as a lamb and as docile.

"What is the matter?"

"There is this the matter: Another officer wants to quarter himself upon us here. Shall I strangle him?"

These words coming from such lips made one shudder.

"Non, my old Lux, keep calm. That would do no good and would only bring worse upon us. Let him in. He probably wishes to speak with his colleagues."

Lux did as his master told him, much against his inclination. It would have given him such a huge amount of pleasure to twist one of those German necks with his great sinewy fingers.

The new arrival burst into the drawing room. The four Prussian officers uttered cries of surprise.

They rose at once in a body and saluted with great respect the stranger who had come to disturb their peace.

"Be seated and let us talk," said the new arrival in German, and in a voice of command.

"You will set out at once," he said, "and take this sealed message to the Prince of X——, at S——!" And he drew out of the pocket of his long military cloak, white with snow, a large, white envelope and handed it to one of the officers.

"Go, all four of you, and place yourselves at the disposition of the prince. Further orders will be given to each of you later. You must get horses and carriage and start at once! Is it understood? Then hasten!"

Then, turning to the host, he said in French:

"Please accommodate these gentlemen with a carriage and two fresh horses General's orders!"

Lux, who had remained standing at the door during this scene, anticipated his master's reply.

"It is well, monsieur l'officier, you shall be accommodated as you desire!"

He spoke in a peculiar tone of voice. Only his master, however, noticed it.

A mad thought had been born in his brain, something superhuman, preposterous. Any one who could have read it in his mind would have been shocked, terror stricken.

While a farmhand harnessed the horses to the carriage Lux put a saddle on Barka, an Arab horse, a faithful animal, which he loved and cared for with his own hands.

He spoke to it as he spoke to a friend, and the noble creature seemed to understand. When Lux mounted into the saddle, he was trembling with joy.

A mysterious dialogue seemed to commence between the man and the horse, which suddenly, sending the sparks flying from beneath its four feet, vanished into the darkness like a phantom.

Barka, like some great mythological creature with wings, devoured space. Her fine, nervous legs hardly seemed to touch the earth, and Lux kept her going at her utmost speed.

At length they stopped. Barka was white with foam, and Lux covered her with his cloak. He did not feel the cold, for the awful thought in his mind kept his whole body warm and tingling.

"It is yonder," he said to himself in a deep voiced growl. "It is there that they are to perish."

At this point the road made a sudden turn, and apparently came to an abrupt end. As a matter of fact, however, it did not terminate, but continued in a steep, terrible slope. On the right was a dark, mysterious wood, and on the left a deep and dizzy precipice, such as are often seen by mountain roads.

Children were afraid to pass it by. The gulf of death, as it was called, had its legend. The old folk said that it was within its gloomy depths the monsters lived that ravaged the country at night.

"If my calculations are correct," said Lux in a low voice, "they will be here in ten minutes."

He tied Barka to a tree stem on the border of the wood, and a strange smile passed over his lips.

An extraordinary scene might then have been witnessed. Lux knelt down in this solitary, accursed, haunted spot in the nighttime and turned his face to heaven. It looked like a sinner asking forgiveness for his sins rather than one planning an awful deed for the satisfaction of his rage and hate.

Not a sound was to be heard in the surrounding country. All seemed dead or asleep, only a murmur of the wind in the pines.

Lux placed his ear to the ground, as the Indians do in the wilderness, and, hearing a faint sound of hoofs in the distance striking the hard road, he raised his head. His face was transfigured.

"At last I shall have my vengeance!" he hissed.

Then he crouched down on his hands and knees and waited.

A few seconds more and the carriage with the four German officers would be upon him.

He uttered a terrible cry of "Vive la France!" to which Barka replied with a joyful neigh.

The carriage, which had been approaching at tremendous speed, came to a sudden stop, as if arrested by an irresistible force, and remained there standing.

Lux had not moved an inch. He was not a man, but a stone wall.

He made a last and supreme effort and raised himself upon his legs. Then with a terrific heave he pushed over the dizzy brink horses, carriage and men.

An awful noise rose on the still night air, a sound of crashing, cursing and horses screaming. Then there was a silence, heavy, complete, tragic!

The man rose and peered over the edge into the black gulf of death. He saw nothing. Then he sprang into his saddle and disappeared like a shadow into the night.—From the French.

When Two Generals Kissed.

The two allied commanders in chief, Simpson and Pelissier, were men of very different character and appearance. The one was a tall, thin Scotchman; the other a short, stout, thickset Norman. The first time they met after the capture of the city, Pelissier rushed up to the English general and embraced him with great fervor, having almost to climb up to reach his cheek. The English staff were amused at this demonstration and said to Simpson, "Why, general, Pelissier kissed you!" And his reply, with a strong national dialect, was, "Well, it was a great occasion, and I could na' resist him."—"Recollections of a Military Life," by General Sir John Adye.

Bewitching.

"Dear me," he petulantly exclaimed, "what a dreadfully muddy crossing, and there's a horrid woman watching me too! Well, I just don't care.

With a contemptuous toss of his head the new man raised his garment to the top of his boots and went his way.

He made a very pretty picture in his confusion.—Detroit Tribune.

DUCHESS TO CRIPPLE

THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH TOLD HIS FIANCEE A PITIFUL STORY.

It Was at Dinner With Mrs. Alva and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt—Then the Light of Plenty Shone In the Wretched Home.

There is a little girl in New York to whom the sound of the words "Marlborough-Vanderbilt" is the sweetest music, and as she hears it tears of gratitude creep down her cheek.

She is a cripple, and the dark, poorly furnished room that she calls home is in the eighteen hundreds of Third avenue.

For years she has been bedridden, but although a hopeless cripple she supports an aged invalid mother.

The earnings that kept the wolf from the door were from the daughter's handicraft in papier mache. She makes plaques that are facsimile duplicates of postage stamps. Her work is so deft that the plaques find a ready market in the art centers and the homes of the wealthy. Naturally the child's greatest difficulty is in getting unconventional or unique postage stamps. These are to be had only from foreign countries.

When the little plaquemaker learned that wedding presents were being received by the Duke of Marlborough for his bride and that they were being returned to their donors, her heart sank, for among the few who have interested themselves in her behalf is a clerk at the Plaza hotel, where the duke was staying, and through him she hoped to get the foreign stamps from the duke's mail matter.

This disappointment was shared by the clerk, but when the beautiful bridal bouquet from the tenants of Blenheim castle arrived the clerk saw his opportunity and forthwith wrote a note to the Duke of Marlborough telling him of the hopes of the little cripple. Immediately there came a reply from the duke, saying that he had requested his secretary, Mr. Morris, to see that the postage stamps which had brought the flowers were turned over to the little plaquemaker.

But what made the little cripple's heart leap was a little piece of paper which bore the inscription "Marlborough," and which was equivalent at the duke's American banker's for more than a dozen plaques, even at the topmost prices.

That evening when the duke dined with the mother of the young woman who is now his duchess he told of the little cripple. The fair Mrs. Alva Vanderbilt and the dainty Consuelo were touched. They sent their agents to find the girl. They found her condition even more pitiable than the duke had described.

It was early on the next morning that a great box of cut flowers arrived at the dingy room where the crippled girl lived with her invalid mother. In it a note read:

"These few roses are from the bridal table of the Duchess of Marlborough, and they are sent with the love and sincerity of the mother of the bride at the bride's request."

With it was a check so large that the little plaquemaker will not have to work for many months.—New York Recorder.

THRIFTY JOHN SHERMAN.

His Successful Advertising of His Forthcoming Book.

Throughout the preparation of his recent political history and its presentation to the public, Senator John Sherman of Ohio has been guided by that very fine sense of thrift which has made him a very wealthy man and which has kept him successfully in public life for a great many years. Probably there was never a forthcoming publication as successfully advertised as this book was, and its advertisement was left entirely in the hands of public men throughout the country.

Permitting the publication of advance sheets which would be likely to stir up controversy, a controversy followed and such public interest was created in the book that its sale, now going on by subscription, is going to be very large. Agents are canvassing Washington and are placing a great many copies.

These agents have made known another shrewd scheme by which $25,000 will be obtained. The price of the cheapest set is $7. Various styles of binding carry the price of ordinary bindings up to $12. There is to be a special edition of 1,000 volumes of the finest binding, which will contain autographic signatures of the distinguished author, and for which his admirers are expected to pay $25 per set. As the agents claim there will be no difficulty in disposing of 1,000 sets, it seems that $25,000 is thus secure aside from what other sales the book may have.—St. Louis Republic.

A War Relic to Be Sold.

An interesting relic of the civil war will soon be sold at auction. It is an old six pounder smoothbore fieldpiece, built at Chicopee, Mass., in 1861. It was part of the battery of a Massachusetts brigade, and was captured at Chickamauga by the Confederates. It was recaptured in 1864 by General Sherman at the fall of Atlanta. Later he placed it on board the dispatch boat Jasmine, which was renamed the Chandler in 1866. The Chandler has since then been used at this port as a boarding boat by customs officers.

The gun has been found to be in the way on the boat, and its sale has been ordered.—New York Times.

His Deathless Fame.

The Lincoln monument at Springfield, Ills., may be crumbling into ruin after only a quarter of a century, but the fame of the martyr president only grows greater as the years roll on. It is built of more enduring stuff than granite or bronze.—Boston Globe.

A PROPHETIC WELL.

Mr. Wheat Says It Always Warns Him of a Coming Storm.

I have been able to forecast the weather during the past season from 12 to 24 hours in advance very accurately, by means of a well which I put down two years since and which has proved phenomenal in this respect.

The well is on a hill overlooking the surrounding country, known as the Wheat hill, is 80 feet deep, 20 feet sand, 40 feet solid blue clay, 20 feet quicksand and ground, has a good supply of water, not effected by the dry weather of this season. Storms are indicated in advance by a discoloration of the water, it having the appearance of milk being dropped in it and being quite agitated in appearance when pumped from the well. This condition of the water usually continues but a short time, generally becoming clear before the storm commences. With an approaching storm these conditions of the water are more or less extreme as the storm will be more or less severe.

As to its reliability and accuracy as a weather forecaster for western New York, I consider it correct from observations of the past summer and fall. While the weather bureau and all of our weather prophets have made mistakes on account of unexpected counter winds and highs and lows, the well has made no mistakes. For example, on the 16th of August last the weather bureau gave no warning of storm. Mr. Parker stated that no rain was in sight and could look for continued dry weather, but the well gave the strongest indications of storm of any time this summer. On Saturday, the 17th, in the afternoon and evening there was a terrific electric and rain storm, which swept Wayne and Ontario counties.

Many other similar instances could be mentioned, but it is unnecessary. I hope this matter may attract the attention of some of our scientific men who are engaged in investigating nature's secrets, for I believe a careful investigation and study of the action of this well in connection with the weather will prove of value.—V. B. Wheat, Orleans, N. Y., in Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

FREE TELEPHONES.

An Ohio Town Profits From Keen Competition.

Norwalk, O., is probably the only city in the United States whose inhabitants, to the number of at least 250, have been furnished with telephones rent free for one year.

The trouble began with the introduction of the Harrison telephone into the city. The company offered a rate considerably lower than that of the Bell Telephone company, and attracted many subscribers. When 200 people had signified their intention of using the new telephone, and the Bell company saw that it must face opposition, it made the announcement that telephones would be placed in business houses and dwellings for $1 a year. This offer at once drew a large number of subscribers, and the list of Bell telephones soon numbered about 300. New wires had to be strung, and, with the Harrison company's 250 telephones, this city of 10,000 people employed over 500 telephones.

When those using the Bell telephone went to pay their yearly rental fee of $1, they were informed that it was not necessary, and receipted bills for the amount were given them. Next year the Bell company will charge for the use of its telephones. The price will be a shade less than that asked by the Harrison company. The latter did not attempt to meet the competition of the Bell company.—New York Sun.

A Senatorial Boom on Wheels.

Governor William MacCorkle of West Virginia is an announced candidate for the United States senatorship to succeed Senator Faulkner, whose term expires in March, 1899. Already he has begun his campaign. To facilitate his canvass he has bought a private car, which is called the MacCorkle and in which the governor goes through the state in style. He seldom travels even a short distance without using the MacCorkle, and, as a rule, he has with him a congenial company to enjoy his hospitality. One day he spends with the editors in convention, the next with the Knights of Pythias or Masons, another day he addresses a presbytery or Methodist conference and the next hobnobs with a gathering of merchants or a labor union convention. A few weeks ago he camped out with the militia boys, and so he goes from one place to another, greeting all and making his private car a home for his friends and a means of furthering his ambition.—Baltimore American.

The Billville Banner.

We are so anxious for the legislature to pass a few $5 bills for the benefit of a suffering community!

A correspondent wants to know how we stand on the money question. Brethren, we don't stand at all; every time we see a silver dollar we're completely floored.

We are not in favor of the Bush bill. If a man is compelled by law to buy a quart of liquor, he'll take it home and the old lady'll get it certain.

There's one good thing about the weekly newspaper business—it's a sure cure for rheumatism. No man can have stiff joints who has to run ten miles a day to keep ahead of the sheriff.—Atlanta Constitution.

Keeping It From the Children.

A romantic feature of the celebrated Maybrick poisoning case is not generally known.

The two children, a boy and girl, who were 3 and 5 years of age at the time of their mother's conviction, have been placed in charge of a worthy couple in one of the English provinces remote from the scene of the tragedy, and are being brought up as the children of this pair, in the hope that their real parentage may never be made known to them.—New York Journal.

THE END OF A DESPOT

THE RULE OF THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK IN EUROPE WILL SOON END.

A Resume of the Rise and Decadence of This Mohammedan Dynasty In Europe. Constantinople No Longer the Key to Asia—What It May Become.

All the signs indicate that the Turkish empire as one of the powers of the world has reached its end. Whether it is to be partitioned among the European powers or is to be kept in nominal life under a government to be constituted by those powers, as one of the latest reports indicates, the result will be the same. The great Mohammedan empire, which at one time threatened all Europe, has existed for the past 40 years only by the toleration of Christendom, and is now reaching the end, and will be practically buried by its own corruption and vices.

It is instructive to recall the rise and fall of this Mohammedan power. Recruiting its strength from the wild and fierce tribes of Asia, it overthrew the effete and decaying Greek empire and wiped it out by the taking of Constantinople eight centuries ago. For many generations after that it was the impending threat of Christendom. It reached its high tide at the siege of Vienna in 1683, nearly a century after the last of the Saracens had been expelled from Spain, and when the kingdom left by Ferdinand and Isabella was already falling into weakness. Since then its power has been slowly ebbing, until now it is on the verge of disintegration. At the same time the process of decay has afflicted Mohammedanism nearly everywhere. The two exceptions indicate the extremes of the scale. In the Sudan the pristine fanaticism and savagery which gave it the original vigor is still extant. In India the spectacle of more Mohammedan subjects than Turkey ever had living under the same government with Christians and Buddhists shows the possibility of the reconciliation with civilized government of that ancient enemy of Christendom.

Exactly what will become of the countries included within the Turkish empire is a puzzle. But it is possible that the charm which has for centuries hung about Constantinople may be dissolved by actual experience. From the time of Constantine to that of Alexander II the possession of that city where Europe and Asia touch has seemed to imply the ownership of the capital of the world. This may have been sounder under former conditions. But the age of steam and electricity has made great changes. The water route to India is through the Suez canal, and Alexandria is the commanding point of that line of communication. The land routes from Europe to Asia will pass through Russia more easily than through Constantinople. Under civilized rule Constantinople may be a great resort, a charming place for rulers and diplomats to carry on their negotiations and intrigues, but it is not likely to become a seat of power to compare with London, Paris, Berlin or St. Petersburg.

Still the change that is coming will terminate an epoch in history. If the European powers can dispose of Turkey without quarreling among themselves, the empire whose term connects us with the decay of Rome will be finally wiped off the map of the world.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Thirty-five Years For a Few Dollars.

An old man in England was sent to prison for four months for petty stealing whose record, the judge who sentenced him said, "is one of the most awful pieces of reading that has ever come to my notice." In 1863 he was sent to jail for three years for stealing two tame rabbits. He then got seven years for stealing 5 shillings and a shawl, then ten years, with seven years' police supervision, for stealing three ducks, and finally consecutive sentences of five years each on three charges of stealing a coat, a pair of reins and a shovel, with another seven years' police supervision. In all 35 years of penal servitude for six thefts of objects whose value amounted to a few dollars.—New York Sun.

No Bond Issue Contemplated.

Notwithstanding the continued steady loss of gold, it is still asserted at the treasury department that there is no immediate prospect of a bond issue, and that such action will not be considered while the balance remains above the $75,000,000 limit, and not even in case it should fall to that figure unless congress fails to take cognizance of the situation at least to the extent of providing some other method of maintaining the national credit by the protection of the gold balance.—Washington Star.

Different Styles of Advertising.

A new advertising wagon introduced in New York is fitted up with two cylinders which keep revolving, giving a momentary view of various business announcements. There are people who would rather spend $10 to catch the eye of two or three thousand people with a contraction of this kind than invest 50 cents to reach a hundred thousand readers in a good newspaper.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Twenty Thousand Without Fixings.

In Italy the market price of the title count is $20,000, but no decorations go with the title. How much is it extra for a little parsley laid along the edges?—Iowa State Register.

United Veterans' Parade.

The proposed union in the city of New York on the next Fourth of July of all veterans who fought on both sides during the rebellion will be an affair of unity and honor, peace and Americanism that will thrill the soul of our country. — Washington National Intelligencer.

For Tennessee's Centennial.

A feature of the Tennessee Centennial exposition, to open in Nashville Sept. 1, 1896, will be a steel tower 300 feet high.

A TYPICAL WESTERN GIRL.

Exploits of the Lovely Miss Staunton of Davenport In the Adirondacks.

With the close of the hunting season in the Adirondacks the hundreds of enthusiastic followers of the chase are returning to their homes.

Nine out of ten persons who ever think of this noble sport at all are inclined to look upon it as being the exclusive monopoly of the sterner sex. This was to a great extent true in years gone by, but is such no longer. Indeed a very large proportion of the admirers of Diana in our great state park—the Adirondacks—are women, and the records go to show that the dainty and delicate hand that poured tea at the pink reception or was gem laden at the swell german can pull a trigger at the right time and bring down an antlered monarch of the woods after the fashion of "any old guide." Not only this, but some of the best shots and most interesting hunting affairs of the season are chargeable to women.

Attired in her suit of corduroy, usually of a grayish or slatish hue, with jacket, shirt waist and short skirt, she goes forth to win laurels with her rifle. She wears heavy tan shoes that lace high and stiff leather leggings that buckle from the ankle to the knee. Around her waist is a cartridge belt, and a hunting knife fits snugly into its scabbard at her side. The knife is usually for ornament only, although at times it may come in very handy to cut away twigs in tight places or peel fine chips for the evening fire.

Some of the female followers of the chase are the Misses Jackson of New York, Miss Grace White of Philadelphia, Miss McAllister of Washington, Miss Julia Belo of Galveston and Miss Frances May Staunton of Davenport.

Miss Staunton is a typical western girl, independent, bright, active and of charming face and figure. She has lovely brown eyes that speak no fear, and with them she has gazed upon a bear at midnight. Not only that, but she killed bruin, who stood open mouthed and fierce 20 feet away. The incident occurred on Long Pond, where a party of young people was in camp. Miss Staunton was awakened by the growls of a bear, and hastily donning her dressing gown she seized a rifle and went out. Bruin, black and ugly, was facing the tent only a rod and a half away, when plucky Miss Staunton emptied the contents of her rifle into his head and breast. The bear made several attempts to reach the young woman, but died within ten feet of her. Miss Staunton, though an excellent shot, has not had the success in deer hunting she otherwise might have had, and this because of her great love of song. Possessed of a voice of wonderful sweetness and purity, she has a passionate fondness for singing while in the woods, and the deer, not especially fond of a human voice, however beautiful, do not generally intrude upon her presence. Still, she has killed at least as many as the law allows this year.—New York Times.

The Ancient Idea.

It was on Sept. 24, 1761, that the Worcester Journal (England) published a thoughtful article entitled "Qualifications of a Wife." "In spelling a little becoming deficiency, and in the punctuation (or what is generally called stopping) by no means conversant. In conversation a little of the lisp, but not of the stammer. A decent share of common sense, just seasoned with a little repartee—a small modicum of wit, but no learning; no learning, I say again and again (either ancient or modern) upon any consideration whatever. A good person, but not perfectly beautiful—a moderate height—a complexion not quite fair, but a little brown. Great good nature, and a prudent generosity." And so on, and so on.

Declined a Renomination.

Mrs. Mary J. R. N. Strang, who for the past 15 years has served as school trustee in Long Island City, N. Y, declined a renomination. The New York Herald says: "She is an excellent school official, and her retirement from public life is a source of much regret. She took much interest in school matters and during her long official life has always been the active secretary of the board of trustees."

A New Southern Poet.

The roll of southern poets has been increased by Miss Mary Louise Huntley of Atlanta. She is a tall, slender, dark girl, reserved, dignified and studious. Her last poem, "The Sobbing Rain," is an exquisite idyl and was quoted and requoted by the press of the country. She is the third talented singer in her city, the other two being Lollie Belle Wylie and Arelia Bell Key.

A Mohair Crepon Skirt.

The sensible woman, says a fashion paper, in purchasing her winter wardrobe will buy a mohair crepon skirt for theater wear. A skirt of this material will be found silky in appearance, will look well with any bodice, and its wearing capacity is unequaled. The fact that this quality of crepon does not wrinkle makes it particularly desirable for theater wear.

For Women's Convenience.

A new departure has been made at the New York Exchange For Women's Work, which is one of the most progressive of such institutions, in the opening of a room in their building, 12 East Thirtieth street, for the accommodation of ladies who are coming to town to do shopping through the summer. Here every convenience will be supplied. Parcels will be kept; there is a telephone and messenger service in the building; a good luncheon is served after 12 o'clock every day, and bouillon, iced tea, lemonade, etc., may be had at all hours, excepting Saturdays, when the exchange closes at noon during the summer months.

A subscription of $3 entitles any one to the use of the room for the season. Single tickets for the day may be had at the cashier's desk for 50 cents. The managers of the exchange trust that, with the added attraction of a comfortable waiting room, there may be an increase in the number of visitors to the rooms of the society and a large patronage, not only in the luncheon room, but in the various departments, and it is hoped that what is usually a dull season may be a prosperous one for the consignors, all women who are trying to support themselves and in many cases their families.—New York Times.

The Pioneer Woman In Journalism.

Mrs. Cornelia Walter Richards has been brought into notice here by the occurrence recently of her seventy-fifth birthday. She was the first woman editor in the country. The Boston Transcript was started as a very small evening paper toward 60 years ago by Dutton & Wentworth, a firm of Boston printers who had the state printing. They engaged Lynde M. Walter, a cultivated gentleman, to edit it. His health soon failed, and he became too ill to do much manual work. In this emergency his sister, Miss Cornelia Walter, acted as his amanuensis. When he died, Miss Walter was engaged to take his place. This was before the time that woman's rights were much talked of. The Transcript had a peculiar tea table sphere, and Miss Walter successfully fitted into it. The paper had not a wide general scope, though there was something like a digest of the more important news of the day in it, which Miss Walter prepared, and she also provided what was thought necessary of the local news of Boston with the aid of one reporter, her sole assistant. She edited The Transcript in this way for a few years and constantly wrote for its columns, leaving the paper to marry a gentleman of pecuniary means.—Hartford Courant.

Plucky Miss Peck.

Women are climbing these days in more ways than one, it seems. A Miss Peck, who is called "a scholarly young woman," of Providence, is going to attempt to climb the Matterhorn this summer. While studying in Athens some years ago Miss Peck ascended Hymettus and Pentlicus, and was so delighted with the experience that she has been an advocate of high climbing ever since. In fact, her enthusiasm led her during a later trip to the Pacific coast to climb Mount Shasta, a distance of 18,000 feet. The Matterhorn is a very difficult peak to climb. Edward Whymper, the famous mountain climber, after eight unsuccessful attempts was the first to climb it, in 1865, but the occasion itself was a very tragic one, as four of his companions by the misstep of one fell 4,000 feet down the precipice and were dashed to pieces. It is to be hoped that Miss Peck will make her perilous journey in safety if for no other reason than that she carries a vast deal of erudition in that head which she takes skyward. She has been professor of Latin in Smith college and has spoken on art and archæology before the National Geographical society, the American Geographical society and many colleges, institutes and clubs.

A Widow's Mourning.

A widow who wishes to be properly gowned chooses the material known as eudora cloth, which is really the finest brand of henrietta, and as it can be got in different weights is adapted to all seasons, writes Isabel A. Mallon in an article on "Mourning and Its Usages" in The Ladies' Home Journal. Of course the jet black is chosen, for what is known as "blue black" when trimmed with crape looks almost like navy blue. A suitable toilet to be worn during the summer shows a skirt of eudora cloth made after the received flaring style and having set in at each side of the front width two side plaits of crape that extend from the waist to the edge of the skirt. The bodice is a round draped one with a high collar of crape and a plait of crape coming just down the center of the front in loop fashion, its end being concealed under a crape belt. The sleeves are of the cloth and shape in to the arms, and have for a finish three narrow folds of crape, while on the outer edge of each are set six small crape buttons. The bonnet is a modified Marie Stuart, made of crape, with dull black strings and a white widow's cap showing from under the edge.

Suffrage In South Carolina.

The patience and perseverance with which the woman's suffrage leaders are proselytizing are well illustrated by the fact that even in such states as South Carolina and Georgia their campaign goes on without resting. As fast as any set of speakers are compelled to return to their home and domestic duties, their places are filled by another group, and every movement, change and conversion of men or women, the formation of every club, or class, is carefully reported and recorded at the national headquarters in Washington, the campaign headquarters in New York and the press headquarters in Boston. In this manner every one interested in the subject can easily learn the exact condition of affairs in any portion of the Union up to within 30 days. No better working or more comprehensive political machinery was ever devised.—New York Mail and Express.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 14 ..... 1896

Representative Shafroth has introduced a novel bill, which has gone to the House Committee on Public Lands. It is designed to protect forests on the public domain from destruction by fire. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to lay out ways 1000 feet in width through such forests on public lands as are liable to destruction by fire, putting them at "intervals of from five to ten miles apart," so that when cleared they may be effective for preventing the spreading of fires The timber on these roads or ways is to be offered for sale at public auction, on the condition that each purchaser is to clear that part of the way of which the timber is bought by him. As to those parts which cannot be so cleared, bids are to be called for for clearing them. The purchaser, or contractor, as the case may be, is to give a bond for the faithful execution of his work. Apparently, it is thought that a good deal of it must be done by contract, as the sum of $500,000 is is appropriated by the act. It is provided that anybody who willfully sets fire or causes setting fire to any timber upon the public domain, or who negligently leaves a fire burning unattended near any such timber, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $5000, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years, or shall be both imprisoned and fined, as thus provided. Any person who builds a camp fire or other fire near timber upon the public domain, and fails to extinguish it before leaving the place, is to be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $1000, or imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than a year, or by both. It is provided that the Secretary of War shall, at the request of the Interior Department, detail soldiers to parol the forests, and that they shall have power to make arrests under this act. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make other provisions for protections also against fire.

Senator Hansborough made a labored effort recently in the Senate to defend and perpetuate the costly, useless and corrupt seed distribution system that Secretary Morton has at last unmasked and killed. No one has denied the condition of that miserable business. These may be summarized as follows: A ring of seedsmen fastened like leeches on the department; seed of no special utility wasted, lost or sent in large lots to those who sold it, and above all scandalous deals by congressmen selling their pro rata of the seeds. No single department of the federal service has been so clearly demonstrated to be useless, costly and corrupting as the seed distribution bureau. When this ring is at last overthrown by that exceptionally courageous and public spirited officer, Secretary Morton, we yet find it with the brazen effrontery to defend itself openly in the United States senate.

The British navy is as much larger than the German navy as the German army is larger than that of Great Britain. The British navy contains 85 armored ships, 147 unarmored ships, 80 gunboats, and 232 torpedo boats with 6,403 guns, while the German navy has 26 armored ships, 27 unarmored ships, 23 gunboats and 200 torpedo boats with 1009 guns. On a peace footing the German army has 395,478 infantry, 67,518 cavalry, 72,598 artillary, 62,406 engineer corps, 102,680 horset, and 2,070 guns, against Great Britain's 111,300 infantry, 15,252 cavalry, 18,360 artillary, 5,450 engineers, 20,065 horses, and 696 guns. This does not include the British Indian Army.

A commercial contemporary, in pointing a moral upon the necessity for American enterprise in transcontinental canal building, recalls the outrage recently perpetrated in San Francisco, when tons of fish were dumped into the bay as the tide went out, because the local market was glutted. Is it not time such conduct were stopped? Savages would be less in-human than the cold-blooded miserly wretches who can thus waste food with hundreds of hungry men, women and children in their immediate vicinity. What argument can be urged in favor of free market stronger than such an exhibition of greed and barbarism?

Senator Stewart from the Committee on Claims, has reported favorably the bill making an appropriation to reimburse the states of California, Oregon and Nevada, for money expended in organizing and equipping troops during the war. The claims of three states amount to $4, 692,189, principal and interest.

Utah begins her career as a State with 19,816 farms, of which 17,860 are unincumbered. The new Commonwealth owns itself, and presents a poor field for the calamity orator.

If Johnnie Bull gets into it with the United States, your Uncle Samuel may have an extra Fourth of July to celebrate.—Ex.

A Horn Curiosity.

Our old school textbook told us that "all horns are not bones," and this is certainly true as far as the horn of the rhinoceros is concerned. That curious protuberance is nothing less than a collection or amalgamation of hairs, so interwoven and agglutinated that under the miscroscope it appears to be of composition similar to the pith of a cornstalk, except that the hairs are not so widely separated by the material that binds them together.

In olden times royalty employed rhinoceros horns for drinking cups, the notion being that poison put into them would show itself by bubbling. There may have been a grain of truth in this, for it is known that the ancient poisons were all acids, and these would certainly decompose the horny structure of the cup very rapidly.—St. Louis Republic.

How to Wheat in a Barrel of Flour.

How many bushels of wheat in a barrel of flour? The testimony of leading flour manufacturers is at variance on this question. The largest manufacturing concern in the world, located at Minneapolis, reports that while ordinarily 4½ to 4½ bushels of wheat are used to make a barrel of flour the present low prices of wheat and wheat offal make these today the cheapest animal foods in the country; that in consequence of this it is safe to say many millers are using over five bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour. It really makes no difference how much wheat they use, as the offal is worth practically as much as the wheat costs, says the Orange Judd Farmer, which adds: If 10 to 30 per cent more wheat is used in the manufacture of flour, it should interest farmers in two ways—primarily in the more rapid reduction of burdensome wheat stocks, which have been the bugbear for two years, and, further, in the possibility of securing at relatively low prices needed supplies of mill feed.

Ed. Yerington passed through from San Francisco to Virginia yesterday morning. He reports that his father has now entirely lost his hearing, but it was hoped that an operation he had recently undergone might in a degree restore the lost faculty—Reno Gazette.

Small Game.

Do all your shooting of small game to-day Section 626 reads: "Every person who, in the State of California, between the fifteenth day of February and the fifteenth day of October in each year, shall hunt, pursue, take, kill, or destroy, or have in his possession, whether taken in the State of California, or shipped into the State from any other State, Territory, or foreign country, except for purposes of propagation, any valley quail, bob-white, partridge, robin, or any kind of wild duck or rail, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Road Commissioner.

Mr. Marsden Mansen, one of the three members of the Bureau of Highways created at the thirty-first session of the Legislature, arrived last Monday evening and remained until yesterday morning. The object of his visit was to find out everything possible in regard to the roads of the County, as to their condition and improvement, the cost of keeping them in repair, the cost for repairs for the past ten years, draining of roads, building bridges and different kinds of land and rock available for road purposes. The members of the Bureau of Highways are travelling over the entire State and will make a very interesting report. Mr Manson has travelled extensively over the State and gives an interesting description of its public highways.

Surprise Party.

A number of the friends of Mr. Schabbell and family surprised them at their residence at Camp Independence last Friday evening. Several vehicles well loaded left town at an early hour, and upon arriving the guests received a hearty welcome from the family. The first part of the evening was spent with games and songs. Dancing was soon commenced, however, and continued until a late hour, harmonica music was furnished by Messrs Marks and Ramsy. A dainty supper was served by the ladies of the party, and a good time had all around.

Mining Developments.

D. C. Lane was a passenger on last Monday's stage, on his way to Los Angeles. Mr Lane intends putting in a 12-horse power gasoline engine at the Sorba mine to be used in operating a hoist. A 15 horse power plant is to be put in at Snow's Canyon to run the new mill. Wm. Arcularius will start for Mojave in a few days to bring up the machinery. Louis Tournel came in to Lone Pine yesterday for supplies to be used at Snow's Canyon. A. Stecker expects to go out there soon to work upon the new mill.

One More Caught

An old Mexican named Angulo, was seen by Ivan Bunney and Paul Mairs last Monday, to give a bottle of whiskey to an Indian. They immediately took the whiskey from the Indian and swore out a warrent of arrest for the Mexican. He was arrested Tuesday and examined before Justice Davidson the same evening, and held to appear before the Superior Court, with bail fixed at $250.

Optician At Lone Pine.

Prof Bernard, the well known optician on the Pacific Coast is now at the Lone Pine Hotel. He has recently spent two weeks at Independence where he did work for many prominent people, all of whom are well pleased with the optician. The Optician corrects all kinds of visual defects, viz: Errors of refraction, such as, hypermatropio, myopia or nearsighted and astigmatism; muscular weakness or strabismus; loss of accomodation of presbyopia. Thousands suffer with headaches which can be remedied with properly fitted glasses. New discovery, glasses equal to natural vision, with which you can see far and near without changing them. They are always soothing and cooling to the eyes, and prevent inflamation, and in many cases remove and prevent headaches. Special care should be taken in selecting the first pair of spectacles, nor should it be attempted without the aid of a responsible optician EXAMINATION FREE.

OUR RAILROAD INTERESTS.

Important Facts In the Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The forthcoming report of the interstate commerce commission will show that Illinois has a greater railway mileage than any other state in the Union. The total mileage of the United States now reaches 178,708, which is an increase of 2,247 from the previous year, 6.02 miles to every 100 square miles of territory and 26.36 miles per 10,000 inhabitants.

Illinois has a total of 10,460 miles, which is 5.85 per cent of all the railway mileage in the country, 18.68 miles for every 100 square miles of territory and 25.32 miles for every 10,000 inhabitants.

Pennsylvania stands second, with 9,594 miles; Texas third, with 9,264; then Kansas, 8,841; Ohio, 8,546; Iowa, 8,477; New York, 8,071; Michigan, 7,663; Missouri, 6,499; Indiana, 6,326.

Delaware, Rhode Island, Vermont and Oklahoma have the smallest mileage.

The highest percentage for territory is naturally found in the small states, and New Jersey leads with 2,891 miles and Pennsylvania 2,123 miles. The highest mileage per 10,000 inhabitants is found in the Rocky mountain states, Montana, Nevada, Wyoming and Arizona.

It will be shown by the interstate commerce report that there are in all 1,924 railways in this country, which are operated by 945 companies. Of the subsidiary roads 338 are leased at a fixed money rental and 188 at a contingent money rental. There are 10 incorporated railways not in operation and 6 private roads not in operation. The number of roads abandoned during the year was 16, aggregating 18,005 miles. The number of roads merged, reorganized and consolidated was 51, representing 5,676 miles.

It is shown that there are 44 companies operating more than 1,000 miles of road, 23 companies operating from 600 to 1,000 miles, 23 companies operating from 400 to 600, 42 companies operating from 250 to 400 miles and 907 companies operating less than 250 miles.

The total number of locomotives in use is 35,492, being an increase of 704 over the previous year. The total number of cars in service is 1,278,078. This, however, does not include private cars of companies or private firms furnishing their own equipments. The business of furnishing rolling stock to railroads or to shippers is increasing rapidly, but it is impossible for the interstate commerce commission to obtain official information concerning them. There was a large falling off in railway equipment during the last year, which is, of course, due to the financial depression and the economy which was introduced in all corporations.—Washington Cor. Chicago Record.

HER MAIDEN SPEECH.

Mrs. Stanton Considered It a Disgrace to Have the Papers Mention It.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in speaking of her maiden speech, says:

"When I returned home from my wedding trip, I decided to hold a convention and discuss women's rights, for I considered the condition of women about as degraded as that of the slave on the southern plantation. I wrote to my two friends in the legislature to know if I could have a hearing on the married woman's property bill, and they replied 'Yes.' From 1840 to 1848 Ernestine L. Rose, Paulina Wright and myself had circulated petitions in the state of New York.

"I used to go up in the garret every day and read over my speech, thinking I could slip to Albany and back without the knowledge of anybody but the legislature, and one day when I was thinking of all this my father entered with the old Albany Evening Journal, edited by Thurlow Weed. He laid the paper down in front of me and said, 'What does this mean?' and there I read, 'Elizabeth Cady Stanton is to address the legislature Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock on the married woman's property bill.'

"I answered, 'I suppose it means what it says.' He was perfectly confounded, and so was I.

"Then he said, 'When my clients are gone, I wish you would read it to me.' I was in the depths of despair. I had never seen my name in print before and thought it was the most awful disgrace that could befall a woman.

"When I read my speech to my father, he suggested several improvements and found worse laws for illustration than I had, working with me until 1 o'clock in the morning, yet for a conservative old judge to have his daughter the subject of ridicule was a deep blow. I spoke two hours, and this, my first speech, was published in The Evening Journal. That same year, 1848, the married woman's property law passed and gave married women their rights to their property."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Europe Is Eating Horse.

Europe has taken to eating its horses for the same reason that it took to eating potatoes, against which it had a great prejudice a hundred years ago—it is bound to do it or go short of flesh food.

Gradually the European press is educating the popular mind out of its prejudice on this matter. The taste of roast horseflesh is very similar to that of roast beef. The fat is much more palatable than that of pork. If a horse has been fed on oats, his sirloin, while cooking, gives off an odor similar to that of a goose in the same process. It is to the further credit of horseflesh that it is never made dangerous by trichinosis and tuberculosis, which very often infect cattle, but hardly ever attack horses.

Oh, no. The future of the horse is not at all doubtful! He is not going to disappear from the earth. There is plenty of room for him on the race track, for general pleasure purposes and as a spoiled darling of society, and as for the plain horse, there will be plenty of room for him by and by at the dinner table.—New York Recorder.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

By GILBERT PARKER.

[Copyright, 1893, by the J. B. Lippincott Co.]

General Armour advanced, hat in hand. "You are my son's wife?" he said courteously to this being in a blanket.

She looked up and shook her head slightly, for she did not quite understand, but she recognized his likeness to her husband, and presently she smiled up musingly. Mackenzie repeated to her what General Armour had said. She nodded now, a flash of pleasure lighting up her face, and she slid out her beautiful hand to him. The general took it and pressed it mechanically, his lips twitching slightly. He pressed it far harder than he meant, for his feelings were at tension. She winced slightly and involuntarily thrust out her other hand, as if to relieve his pressure. As she did so the blanket fell away from her head and shoulders. Lambert, with excellent intuition, caught it and threw it across his arm. Then, quickly and without embarrassment, he and Mrs. Townley greeted General Armour, who returned the greetings gravely, but in a singular confidential tone, which showed his gratitude. Then he raised his hat again to Lali and said, "Come and let me introduce you—to your husband's mother."

"You are my son's wife?" he said.

The falling back of that blanket had saved the situation, for when the girl stood without it in her buckskin garments there was a dignity in her bearing which carried off the bizarre event. There was timidity in her face, and yet a kind of pride, too, though she was only a savage. The case, even at this critical moment, did not seem quite hopeless. When they came to Mrs. Armour, Lali shrank away timidly from the look in the mother's eyes, and shivering slightly looked round for her blanket. But Lambert had deftly passed it on to the footman. Presently Mrs. Armour took both the girl's hands in hers—perhaps she did it because the eyes of the public were on her, but that is neither here nor there, she did it—and kissed her on the cheek. Then they moved away to a closed carriage.

And that was the second act in Frank Armour's comedy of errors.

CHAPTER IV.

The journey from Liverpool to Greyhope was passed in comparative silence. The Armours had a compartment to themselves, and they made the Indian girl as comfortable as possible, without self consciousness, without any artificial politeness. So far what they had done was a matter of duty, not of will, but they had done their duty naturally all their lives, and it was natural to them now. They had no personal feelings toward the girl one way or another as yet. It was trying to them that people stared into the compartment at different stations. It presently dawned upon General Armour that it might also be trying to their charge. Neither he nor his wife had taken into account the possibility of the girl having feelings to be hurt. But he had noticed Lali shrink visibly and flush slightly when some one stared harder than usual, and this troubled him. It opened up a possibility. He began indefinitely to see that they were not the only factors in the equation. He was probably a little vexed that he had not seen it before, for he wished to be a just man. He was wont to quote with more or less austerity—chiefly the result of his professional life—this, "For justice all place a temple and all seasons summer." And, man of war as he was, he had another saying which was much in his mouth, and he lived up to it with considerable sincerity, "Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace to silence envious tongues."

It was trying to them that people stared into the compartment.

He whispered to his wife. It would have been hard to tell from her look what she thought of the matter, but presently she changed seats with her husband that he might, by holding his newspaper at a certain angle, shield the girl from intrusive gazers.

At every station the same scene was enacted. And inquisitive people must have been surprised to see how monotonously ordinary was the manner of the three white people in the compartment. Suddenly at a station near London General Armour gave a start and used a strong expression under his breath.

Glancing at the "marriage" column, he saw a notice to the effect that on a certain day of a certain month Francis Gilbert, the son of General Joseph Armour, C. B., of Greyhope, Hertfordshire and Cavendish square, was married to Lali, the daughter of Eye-of-the-Moon, chief of the Bloods, at her father's lodge in the Saskatchewan valley. This had been inserted by Frank Armour's solicitor, according to his instructions, on the day that the Aphrodite was due at Liverpool. General Armour did not at first intend to show this to his wife, but on second thought he did, because he knew she would eventually come to know of it, and also because she saw that something had moved him. She silently reached out her hand for the paper. He handed it to her, pointing to the notice.

Mrs. Armour was unhappy, but her self possession was admirable, and she said nothing. She turned her face to the window and sat for a long time looking out. She did not turn to the others, for her eyes were full of tears, and she did not dare to wipe them away, nor yet to let them be seen. She let them dry there. She was thinking of her son, her favorite son, for whom she had been so ambitious, and for whom, so far as she could and retain her self respect, she had delicately intrigued that he might happily and befittingly marry. She knew that in the matter of his engagement she had not done what was best for him, but how could she have guessed that this would be the result? She also was sure that when the first flush of his anger and disappointment had passed, and he came to view this thing with cooler mind, he would repent deeply—for a whole lifetime. She was convinced that he had not married this savage for anything which could make marriage endurable. Under the weight of the thought she was likely to forget that the young alien wife might have lost terribly in the event also.

The arrival at Euston and the departure from St. Pancras were rather painful all round, for, though there was no waiting at either place, the appearance of an Indian girl in native costume was uncommon enough, even in cosmopolitan London, to draw much attention. Besides the placards of the evening papers were blazoned with such announcements as this, "A red Indian girl married into an English county family."

Some one had telegraphed particulars—distorted particulars—over from Liverpool, and all the evening sheets had their portion of extravagance and sensation. General Armour became a little more erect and austere as he caught sight of these placards, and Mrs. Armour groaned inwardly, but their faces were inscrutable, and they quietly conducted their charge, minus her blanket, to the train which was to take them to St. Albans and were soon wheeling homeward.

At Euston they parted with Lambert and Mrs. Townley, who quite simply and conventionally bade goodby to them and their Indian daughter-in-law. Lali had grown to like Mrs. Townley, and when they parted she spoke a few words quickly in her own tongue and then immediately was confused, because she remembered that she could not be understood. But presently she said in halting English that the face of her white friend was good, and she hoped that she would come one time and sit beside her in her wigwam, for she would be sad till her husband traveled to her.

Mrs. Townley made some polite reply in simple English, pressed the girl's hand sympathetically and hurried away. Before she parted from Mr. Lambert, however, she said, with a pretty touch of cynicism: "I think I see Marion Armour listening to her sister-in-law issue invitations to her wigwam. I am afraid I should be rather depressed myself if I had to be sisterly to a wigwam lady."

"But I say, Mrs. Townley," rejoined Lambert seriously as he loitered at the steps of her carriage, "I shouldn't be surprised if my Lady Wigwam—a rather apt and striking title, by the way—turned out better than we think. She carried herself rippingly without the blanket, and I never saw a more beautiful hand in my life—but one," he added as his fingers at that moment closed on hers and held them tightly in spite of the indignant little effort at withdrawal. "She may yet be able to give them all points in dignity and that kind of thing and pay Master Frank back in his own coin. I do not see, after all, that he is the martyr."

Lambert's voice got softer, for he still held Mrs. Townley's fingers, the footman not having the matter in his eye, and then he spoke still more seriously on sentimental affairs of his own, in which he evidently hoped she would take some interest. Indeed it is hard to tell how far the case might have been pushed if she had not suddenly looked a little forbidding and imperious, for even people of no notable height, with soft features, dark brown eyes and a delightful little laugh, may appear rather regal at times. Lambert did not quite understand why she should take this attitude. If he had been as keen regarding his own affairs of the affections as in the case of Frank Armour and his Indian bride, he had known that every woman has in her mind the occasion when she should and when she should not be wooed, and nothing disappoints her more than a declaration at a time which is not her time. If it does not fall out as she wishes it, retrospect, a dear thing to a woman, is spoiled. Many a man has been set to the right about because he has ventured in a proposal at the wrong time. What would have occurred to Lambert it is hard to tell, but he saw that something was wrong and stopped in time.

When General Armour and his party reached Greyhope, it was late in the evening. The girl seemed tired and confused by the events of the day and did as she was directed indifferently, limply. But when they entered the gates of Greyhope and traveled up the long avenue of limes she looked round her somewhat eagerly and drew a long sigh, maybe of relief or pleasure. She presently stretched out a hand almost caressingly to the thick trees and the grass and said aloud, "Oh, the beautiful trees and the long grass!" There was a whir of birds' wings among the branches, and then presently there rose from a distance the sweet gurgling whistle of the nightingale. A smile as of reminiscence crossed her face. Then she said, as if to herself: "It is the same. I shall not die. I hear the birds' wings, and one is singing. It is pleasant to sleep in the long grass when the nights are summer and to hang your cradle in the trees."

She had asked for her own blanket, refusing a rug, when they left St. Albans, and it had been given to her. She drew it about her now with a feeling of comfort and seemed to lose the horrible sense of strangeness which had almost convulsed her when she was put into the carriage at the railway station. Her reserve had hidden much of what she really felt, but the drive through the limes had shown General Armour and his wife that they had to do with a nature having capacities for sensitive feeling, which, it is sometimes thought, is only the prerogative of certain well bred civilizations.

But it was impossible that they should yet, or for many a day, feel any sense of kinship with this aboriginal girl. Presently the carriage drew up to the doorway, which was instantly open to them. A broad belt of light streamed out upon the stone steps. Far back in the hall stood Marion, one hand upon the balustrade of the staircase, the other tightly held at her side, as if to nerve herself for the meeting. The eyes of the Indian girl pierced the light, and, as if by a strange instinct, found those of Marion even before she left the carriage. Lali felt vaguely that here was her possible enemy. As she stepped out of the carriage, General Armour's hand under her elbow to assist her, she drew her blanket somewhat more closely about her and so proceeded up the steps. The composure of the servants was in the circumstances remarkable. It needed to have been, for the courage displayed by Lali's two new guardians during the day almost faltered at the threshold of their own home. Any sign of surprise or amusement on the part of the domestics would have given them some painful moments subsequently. But all was perfectly decorous. Marion still stood motionless, almost dazed. The group advanced into the hall and there paused, as if waiting for her.

At that moment Richard came out of the study at her right hand, took her arm and said quietly: "Come along, Marion. Let us be as brave as our father and mother."

She gave a hard little gasp and seemed to awake as from a dream. She quickly glided forward ahead of him, kissed her mother and father almost abruptly, then turned to the young wife with a scrutinizing eye. "Marion," said her father, "this is your sister." Marion stood hesitating, confused.

"Marion, dear," repeated her mother ceremoniously, "this is your brother's wife. Lali, this is your husband's sister, Marion."

Mackenzie translated the words swiftly to the girl, and her eyes flashed wide. Then in a low voice she said in English, "Yes, Marion, how?"

It is probable that neither Marion nor any one present knew quite the meaning of "how," save Richard, and he could not suppress a smile—it sounded so absurd and aboriginal. But at this exclamation Marion once more came to herself. She could not possibly go so far as her mother did at the dock and kiss this savage, but with a rather sudden grasp of the hand she said a little hysterically, for her brain was going round like a wheel, "Wo-won't you let me take your blanket?" and forthwith laid hold of it with tremulous politeness.

The question sounded for the instant so ludicrous to Richard that, in spite of the distressing situation, he had to choke back a laugh. Years afterward if he wished for any momentary revenge upon Marion—and he had a keen sense of wordy retaliation—he simply said, "Wo-won't you let me take your blanket?"

Of course the Indian girl did not understand, but she submitted to the removal of this uncommon mantle and stood forth a less trying sight to Marion's eyes, for, as we said before, her buckskin costume set off softly the good oultines of her form.

The Indian girl's eyes wandered from Marion to Richard. They wandered from anxiety, doubt and a bitter kind of reserve to cordiality, sympathy and a grave kind of humor. Instantly the girl knew that she had in eccentric Richard Armour a frank friend. Unlike as he was to his brother, there was still in their eyes the same friendliness and humanity—that is, it was the same look that Frank carried when he first came to her father's lodge.

Richard held out his hand with a cordial little laugh and said: "Ah, ah, very glad, very glad! Just in time for supper. Come along. How is Frank, eh? How is Frank? Just so, just so. Pleasant journey, I suppose?" He shook her hand warmly three or four times, and as he held it placed his left hand over it and patted it patriarchally, as was his custom with all the children and all the old ladies that he knew.

'Marion," said her father, "this is your sister."

"Richard," said his mother in a studiously neutral voice, "you might see about the wine."

Then Richard appeared to recover himself and did as he was requested, but not until his brother's wife had said to him in English as they courteously drew her toward the staircase, "Oh, my brother Richard, how!"

But the first strain and suspense were now over for the family, and it is probable that never had they felt such relief as when they sat down behind closed doors in their own rooms for a respite, while the Indian girl was closeted alone with Mackenzie and a trusted maid in what she called her wigwam.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The lands passing out of the hands of the general Government in this State last year amounted to 1556 square miles. In Arizona the lands passing out of the hands of the Government were 544 square miles. The figures for Utah are 325 square miles, while in Nevada only 131 square miles were taken up.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

A Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect, who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

DIAMONDS EN MASSE.

A Gravel Pit Full of the Gems Found In Northern Ontario.

Girard Drouillard and James Martin, prospectors and reputable citizens, have just arrived at Tower, Minn., with their pockets full of diamonds. They tell a strange story of the finding of a bed of diamonds in Ontario about 400 miles north of Hunter's island, on the boundary line.

Several of the diamonds brought back by Drouillard and Martin have been partially cut and polished by a local jeweler and have been found to be of the pure white variety, without a flaw in them.

"About 400 miles north of the boundary," said Martin, "we came to a small lake in a country so wild and rough as to be almost inaccessible, and there we ran on to half a dozen Indians, who for a time seemed very suspicious of us. Drouillard finally won them over, and before two days had gone by we were on the most intimate terms. These Indians were armed with old time muzzle loading guns, and I noticed that the deer and moose killed by them were torn in terrible shape, as though shot with explosive bullets. On asking what this meant I was almost knocked off my feet with astonishment to learn that the Indians were not shooting lead bullets at all, but pebbles obtained at a gravel pit not far from the lake. We made a close examination of the pebbles and found they were diamonds, and that the gravel pit was full of them."

The stones brought back by Martin and Drouillard have every indication of being diamonds in the rough. Jeweler Larson, to whom they were submitted, estimated the value of the lot at not less than $10,000. The men have arranged to buy the diamond mine from the owner, an Indian named Trodeau, for $7,000.—New York Recorder.

Few Florida Oranges.

Indications point to an almost complete failure of the Florida orange crop this year. One of the largest fruit importers in the city said yesterday that the Florida crop would not be over 100,000 boxes, whereas an average crop is in the neighborhood of 5,000,000 boxes.

The cause of the small yield was the frost of last January, which killed many fruit trees of all kinds throughout Florida. The scarcity of oranges will cause a temporary rise in the price until the crops from other sections arrive in the market. The Jamaica orange will arrive soon after the holidays. Later we will get the fruit from Sicily, from Valencia, Spain, and finally from California.

The freight charges and duties on the foreign products will serve, however, to keep the prices at a slight advance over those of former years.—New York Sun.

A New Fuel For Steamships.

A French naval engineer named D'Humy has invented a pressed oilcake for use as fuel on ocean steamers. It is not affected by temperature, is smokeless and odorless, cannot evaporate or cause explosions and burns only on the surface, giving out intense heat, and leaving only from 2 to 3 per cent of ash. A ton of this fuel is equal to 30 tons of coal and costs between $5 and $10.

VERY RICH INDEED

In the elements that supply the human system with bone, muscle and brain substance is a circulation fertilized with the supreme tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which begets thorough assimilation and digestion, and gives a healthful impulse to every function of the body. Dyspeptic and weakly persons give strong testimony in its behalf. So do those troubled with biliousness, malaria, rheumatism, constipation, and inactivity of the kidneys.

THE NEW YEAR OUTLOOK.

The business of the country has become so dependent upon politics, especially the manufacturing and importing interests, that there is again a lull in its activities, waiting to see what changes may take place in tariff and other laws bearing upon such important branches of trade. As Congress cannot mature such changes much before the last of summer, the outlook is somewhat discouraging. But at the same time the vexations of such a state of things ought not to be allowed to fret the nervous system. Better times will come at last on more substantial basis. Meanwhile it is well to know that worry to the nervous is the prolific source of Neuralgia and kindred ailments, and it is also established that in spite of what Congress may do, or any other cause of vexation to the nervous system, St. Jacobs Oil will cure Neuralgia in any form. It is poor business to worry and grow sick when one can get well and finally prosper.

A YEAR'S HISTORY.

Chronological Record of Twelve Months.

FULL RECORD OF 1895.

An Epitome of All Events of Importance.

The Usual Admixture of Disaster, Crime, Political Changes, Commercial Achievements, and International Complications—Atrocities of Turks in Armenia the Most Shocking Page in Modern History—Powers of Europe Unite in Demanding Reform—Cuban Revolution Next in Public Interest.

With but two exceptions, the nature of the events which go to make up the history of the past year is not startling. The butchery of thousands of Armenians by Turks has aroused the European powers, and at the close of the year active preparations were in progress which suggested the probable dismemberment of the Ottoman empire. The revolt of Cubans against Spanish rule was the next most important affair, and that, too, was in full sway at the close of the year. Spain seems to fruitlessly bend every energy toward its suppression. Popular sympathy is largely with the Cubans, and their success seems not improbable. In American politics the year has been exciting, and one of the great parties has suffered such reverses as to leave the chief executive unsupported in political faith by a majority in either house of Congress. A chronological record of events follows:

January.

PUFFING THE PLAY.

"A New York Success"—Abuse of Press Courtesy.

The United States is a broad and busy country, and it is well supplied with excellent journals, says the Forum. As is natural and unavoidable, these generally take their tone in treating dramatic affairs from those of the metropolis. What is said and done in New York about plays and actors is published all over the union as quickly as the wires and press can spread the news. Consequently the theatrical business of the entire country is managed from New York. That is why actors, managers and the minor personages of stage life flock to New York. That is why for many years past it has been possible for the wily speculator in rotten dramatic lumber to set up a flimsy stage structure, held together only by the adhesive qualities of paint and printers' ink, and—by keeping a New York theater open and empty for its exhibition for a stated term of weeks at the expense of $3,000 or $4,000 a week, and by a continual pestering of the good-natured journalist—to obtain a sufficient amount of notice of his "great New York success!" to enable him to travel throughout the country with his "show," and gather a rich harvest from those who are eager to see what sort of plays please the people of the great city.

Of course the "show" soon falls to pieces from the weight of its own worthlessness, and the seeds of general contempt for New York's good taste in theatrical matters are sown broadcast. But no matter. The enterprising speculator, now well in funds, returns to New York and is soon upon the full tide of another like venture. Year after year this sort of thing goes on. But the people of the East, South and West are becoming wise and wary. The "business" is not so good now as it once was in those often-deluded sections. One of the roots of our theatrical troubles upon which the ax should fall quickly and sharply is this abuse of the press courtesy—first extended in good nature toward the struggling artist, but now demanded as a right by the brass-band "show boomer."

Our hardest battles are those we fight with ourselves.

EARTH WABBLINGS.

A WISE MAN MAKES DISCOVERIES WITH A PENDULUM.

An Unsuspected Motion Indicated by Tests In Colorado's Elevated Capitol—This Same Scientist Once Had an Experience In Switzerland.

It is a curious old contrivance, this world of ours. It has more motions than almost any other eccentric body, and the more it is studied the more motions it has. First of all, it travels about the sun; then it takes a whirl of its own accord around itself, like a top; then it wobbles from one end to the other, just a little bit, it is true, but enough to make a motion. Now it has another quirk, and what that quirk is goodness only knows. The new quirk does not exist at the equator, but it does at the north pole. It is very slight at sea level, but up in the mountains it is quite perceptible. Anybody can see it if he wants to, this newly discovered movement of the world.

Suspended from the lantern of the state capitol building, which is that tall, thin tower on top of the dome and reaching into the subbasement is a wire. It is of steel, one-sixteenth of an inch thick, and on the end of it is a plumb, filled with wet sand and weighing about 40 pounds. A wise man who once had a similar contrivance working in Switzerland has started this one in the capitol dome. His observations in Switzerland got him into no end of trouble. He said the world made such and such a movement, or rather that his pendulum did, and as the big pendulum did it, then, he argued, the world must do it amid its many other remarkable acts. But the astronomers came down on him like a thousand of bricks. They hauled out their papers and their telescopes, their spectroscopes, their picroscopes, their algebras and everything else they possessed and proved that the experimenting scientist was not only wrong, but quite wrong.

He said his pendulum described an ellipse. The astronomers said it did nothing of the kind, if not interfered with, and the worst of it was they proved it. Now he has proved it himself, and although it reverses his former position he is immensely pleased with the result of his observations. The experiment made in the Alps several years ago and that just made in the dome of the capitol is simple and a very beautiful one.

The long pendulum was suspended and the center of gravity determined—that is, a spot was marked which was exactly beneath the suspensory at the top of the lantern. The pendulum was then carried in a straight line 16 feet to the north of the center of gravity and released. This gave a full swing of 32 feet. As any one would suppose, the pendulum went as a clock pendulum does, backward and forward, but slowly it left the straight north and south course through the center of gravity, veering toward the west. Little by little the end of the swing, which should have always swung back to the north, if it was to keep up the figure described by a clock pendulum, gradually crept west, until it went through 45 degrees, when it was swinging from south to north. Then it crept east and around to the point of beginning. In 48 hours to a minute almost a complete circle had been described.

The experiment is said to have been a complete success. Twice each day the pendulum was given a new impetus, its own weight and natural laws tending to stop it. Before grasping it the scientists conducting the experiment would carefully sight between the two points on the basement floor it was oscillating over, and having fixed them to a nicety would seize the plumb, carry it to the full 16 foot point and release it for another 12 hours' journey. For six days this was kept up, and three times did that pendulum make a complete revolution.

What got the scientist who is now at work in the capitol into trouble in Switzerland was a similar experiment to that he is now making. He went as near the top of a mountain as he could, and from the projecting bough of a tree suspended a 300 foot pendulum. He followed there precisely the same methods he did in Denver last week, but instead of his plumb traveling in sharp lines back and forth it described an ellipse—that is, it made a long O.

This struck the experimenter as being a marvelous discovery. He wrote about it in a most learned manner. His pendulum did precisely what it did in the dome of the capitol. It made its revolution, but the ellipse was what caused the immense excitement and shook up the astronomers. Now the experimenter has decided that the ellipse was all occasioned by the give which the bough of his tree must certainly have allowed, no matter how stanch the tree, and his experiment in the capitol quite bears him out in this position. The capitol was selected because it is over a mile above the sea level, it is absolutely stationary, and the interior is free from all outside interferences, such as drafts or flying projections.

It had been stated that the world has more quirks in it than were ever dreamed about, and every time it is tampered with something new is discovered. The fact is that it is all the time shaking like an aspen. A basin of mercury which Assistant Superintendent Griner of the capitol keeps in the place, mercury being the most sensitive of all liquids, shows the capitol to shake very much. Reduced to common measurement, perhaps the oscillation is about decimal ten naughts and one of an eighth of an inch, but the shake is there because the mercury quivers. — Denver Republican.

The bishop of Carlisle boasts that he "can sew a button on better than any woman." The late bishop of Worcester learned to knit, so as to be able to take up his wife's dropped stitches when she grew old.

GEODETIC TOWERS.

Three Built in Ohio to Determine the Earth's Shape.

Brown County, and its sisters, Clermont and Adams Counties, Ohio, have within their borders three towers, the erection of which, with the surveying, the building and experiments, occupied twelve years of time, and cost $150,000. The first tower was erected about three miles from Bethel, Clermont County, on the plateau. The land through the southern part of Ohio is several hundred feet higher than the river. This tower was 136 feet high, and was arranged with an interior stairway, leading to the platform on top of the structure. The tower was not expensive, so far as material was concerned, but was costly, because the hauling and the dressing of the timber required much expenditure. The second tower was built on Ash ridge, in Brown County, ten miles from the Bethel structure. It was 140 feet above the elevation, and was in no way different from the Bethel tower. The third tower was built at Peach Mountain, a rough wooded hill, something like 900 feet above the river surface.

TOWER AT PEACH MOUNTAIN.

The towers were erected by what is known in geographical circles as the Geodetic Society. Its object is to determine the exact shape of the earth. This line is the only one on earth running east and west. There are two or three north and south lines. Russia has the longest line ever run, from the Black Sea to the northern limit of the kingdom. There is one in India run by England, and France and England together have one in Scotland, extending to the Balearic islands. The United States is the only land with sufficient east and west country on which a line can be run. It is the general belief that the world is flat at the poles. These lines will be used to determine the exact shape of the earth. It is claimed that next summer messages will be flashed by mirror from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Insisted on Apologizing.

Senator Gorman tells a story on himself. He was sitting one day eating lunch in the old Barnum hotel in Baltimore, with a friend, when another gentleman came up and was introduced. Finally the visitor, who had not caught Gorman's name, remarked to him: "Do I understand you come from Howard County?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Gorman.

"Then you know a man there by the name of Arthur Gorman?"

"Yes, sir; very well," replied the Senator, without a smile.

"What sort of a man is he?"

"He looks very much like me," said the Senator.

Just at that moment the Senator's friend nudged the visitor. "You are talking to Gorman himself," he whispered. The man turned around. "And you are Gorman?" he inquired. The Senator pleaded guilty.

"Well, sir," said the man, "I owe you an apology."

"Not at all," said the Senator, pleasantly.

"But, sir, I do," persisted the man with the air of one who had been greatly disappointed. "I am mortified beyond measure. I thought Senator Gorman was really somebody, and you, sir, are as common looking as I am."—Washington Post.

Queen Victoria's Taste In Plays.

I suspect that the queen would be a much more frequent patron of the drama were it not that so few plays produced in recent years have been suitable for presentation at court. To obtain the entree, a play has to have as clean a record as a debutante, and it must be admitted that plays have very rarely come up to that description of late. Of plays with a purpose, the queen has a wholesome horror. Her majesty has almost as great an objection to make the acquaintance of women with a past on the stage as in real life. The kind of play most to her majesty's liking is a broad comedy, with a good dab of sentiment in it. All the Guelphs have a big vein of sentiment in their composition, and if anything Queen Victoria has more than her proper share.—London Figaro.

Schlegel's Conceit.

"Here is a pleasant trait of amour propre supplied me by Schlegel. One day he read me a letter he had addressed to one of his friends. Shortly afterward I happened to see that the friend had died. I spoke of it to Schlegel, who replied, 'Yes, he is dead; but, however, he had time to receive my letter before dying.' As if, comments Constant, the destination of the friend had been above all to read Schlegel's letter, and that, having read the letter, he might depart in peace."—Letters of Benjamin Constant.

STRONG ON FIGURES.

WERE LIGHTNING CALCULATORS BY A GIFT OF NATURE.

Two Boys Whose Peculiar Talents Attracted General Attention—Some of the Difficult Tests Through Which They Passed Successfully.

George Parker Bidder was born in 1806 at Morton Hampstead, in Devonshire, where his father carried on a small business as a stonemason. At the early age of 4 he showed a most extraordinary ability for calculation, which with slight assistance from an elder brother assumed quite phenomenal proportions. His peculiar talents soon attracted general attention, and his father found it a much more profitable employment to carry his son about the country and exhibit him as the "Calculating Phenomenon" than following his trade. In this way young Bidder visited many parts of England, astonishing the different people who came to question him by the wonderful rapidity with which he was able to answer, without external aid of any description, the most difficult questions. Of these the following are a few of the most extraordinary examples: If a flea spring 2 feet and 3 inches in every hop, how many hops must it take to go around the world, the circumference being 25,020 miles, and how long would it be performing the journey allowing it to take 60 hops every minute without intermission? Answer, 58,713,600 hops and 1 year, 314 days, 13 hours and 20 minutes.

The following question was solved by him in 40 seconds: Suppose the ball at the top of St. Paul's cathedral to be 6 feet in diameter, what did the gilding cost at 3½d. per square inch? Answer, £237 10s. 1d.

The following in 1 minute and 20 seconds: Suppose a city to be illuminated with 9,999 lamps, each lamp to consume one pint of oil every four hours in succession, how many gallons would they consume in 40 years? Answer, 109,489,050 gallons.

Another curious question was: Suppose the earth to consist of 971,000,000 inhabitants and suppose they die in 30 years and 4 months, how many have returned to dust since the time of Adam, computing it to be 5,850 years? Multiply the answer by 99.

During one of his exhibition tours, fortunately for the lad, his performances attracted the attention of eminent scholars, who after making inquiries subsequently undertook his education. He was attached to the ordnance survey for a short time and afterward was associated with Stephenson, the great engineer.

Some years after, he entered parliament, and numerous stories are extant of his wonderful skill in detecting a flaw in some elaborate sets of calculations, whereby he was often enabled to upset an opponent's case. Or, at other times, he would establish his own case by arguments based upon mathematical data, possibly only at the moment placed before him. It is said that on one occasion an opposing counsel asked that he might not be allowed to remain in the committee room on the ground that "nature had endowed him with qualities that did not place his opponents on a fair footing."

After taking a leading part in many important engineering works, he died at Dartmouth, Sept. 20, 1878.

Another of these extraordinary children, between whom and Bidder honors were almost equally divided, was Zerah Colburn, born at Cabot, Vt., Sept. 1, 1804. Signs of his wonderful power appeared at a very tender age. The discovery was accidentally made by his father, who was much surprised one day to hear him repeating the product of several numbers, although at the time he had received no other instruction than such as could be obtained at a small country school whose curriculum did not include writing or ciphering. He thereupon proposed a variety of arithmetical questions to his son, all of which the child answered with remarkable facility and correctness. At the age of 8 the boy was able to solve most difficult questions by the mere operation of his mind. Many persons of the first eminence for their knowledge in mathematics made a point of seeing and conversing with him, and they proposed to him a great variety of questions to test his marvelous powers. Among them were the following:

Give the square root of 999,999. After hesitating a little he replied 999,999,000,001 and observed that he produced this result by multiplying the square of 37,037 by the square of 27. He was then asked to multiply the answer twice by 49 and once by 25, a task which he accomplished successfully, though the answer consists of 17 figures.

Name the cube root of 413,993,348,677. To this he gave the correct answer in five seconds. How many times would a coach wheel 12 feet in circumference turn round in 256 miles, and how many minutes in 48 years. To the first he replied in two seconds 112,640, and to the second, before the question could be written down, 25,228,800, and added that the number of seconds in the same period was 1,513,728. What are the factors of 247,483? To this he replied 941 and 263, which are the only factors.—Strand Magazine.

As Women See Women.

Alice Stone Blackwell, in answer to a question by a Boston paper, wrote: "The question, Are women more charitable toward the faults of other women than men are? must be answered in the negative. Men see the faults of women through a certain softening glamor of sex. Women look at them clear sightedly and with an impartiality that is often pitiless."

The most extravagant instance of literary relic worship on record is said to be that of a well known Englishman who constantly wears, in a small locket attached to a chain around the neck, a portion of the charred skull of Shelley.

ACETYLENE GAS.

Something About the Production of the New Illuminant.

By heating in an electric furnace a mixture of lime and carbon a combination of the two substances ensues, and a stone-like material, the calcium carbide, is produced. When water comes in contact with it, part of the hydrogen of the water combines with the carbon, forming acetylene; the rest of the hydrogen, with the oxygen of the water, combines with the calcium, forming calcium hydrate.

This apparatus is of the type of the familiar hydrogen gas generator of the chemist. In all such apparatus for the production of acetylene due regard has to be had to the extraordinary rapidity of evolution, comparable only to the evolution of carbon dioxide gas from sodium bicarbonate and acid. In the outer casing, which is about one-half filled with water, a fixed bell or receiver is inverted, whose lower lip reaches to within a short distance of the bottom of the containing vessel. A rod passes through the top of the receiver, the joint being made gas-tight by a stuffing box, so that the rod can be pushed up and down. To the lower end of the rod a conical wire basket is secured. From the top of the receiver a tube passes off to conduct the gas to the burners, and a hole with tightly fitting screw stopper is provided in the top for the introduction of calcium carbide.

PUT IN JAIL.

An Attorney's Peculiar Predicament in a Justice Trial.

"I was imprisoned in a stable once," said a well-known attorney to a Washington Star writer. "I had been retained to recover a mule in a mountain county of North Carolina. The mule had been taken from my client and I obtained a writ of replevin, under which the sheriff turned the animal over to me. He was placed in a log stable until the case could be tried the next morning. Court convened about sunrise, under a big oak tree, and the mule was sent for, but the brute had escaped and could not be found.

"'Cou't will come to order,' said the justice, 'an' es the critter is gone, the red-headed lawyer'll take his place, bein' as he was the las' one thet hed 'im in charge.'

"The trial progressed and judgment was rendered in favor of my client for the mule, but in the absence of the property, the justice said:

"'The mule was wuth a hunderd dollars, an' as the lawyer let 'im git a way, I'll render judgment agin 'im for a hundred dollars an' costs, an' the sheriff'll imprison 'im 'till the cost are paid.'

"Of course the proceedings were illegal, but as I did not have enough money in my pockets to pay the costs, I was locked up in the log stable until I could send thirty miles over the mountains and get the cash. All day long I staid in the impromptu jail, and as it grew dark my thoughts were not of a pleasant nature. Suddenly a nose stuck threw the chinks. It was the lost mule, and I have never been as glad to see any living creature, as I was to greet that long-eared representative of the equine race. I succeeded in making the owner of the stable hear me, and in a few minutes the mule had taken my place in the stable."

A Nation of Coffee Drinkers.

The Americans are a coffee-drinking people. The last fiscal year the value of coffee imported into the United States exceeded the value of any other single article, amounting to a total of $96,130,717. Ordinarily sugar stands at the head of the list of imports, but the excessive importations of sugar in 1894 in anticipation of the tax imposed by the tariff cut importations down from $128,898,882 in 1894 to $77,788,727 in 1895. During the current fiscal year a large increase in the revenue may be anticipated from increased receipts from sugar duties.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 21..... 1896

The report of the commissioners ated by Congress to make an investigation of the route of the proposed Nicaragua canal has been sent to the House of Representatives by the President, after a long and apparently inexcusable delay. It contains elaborate data respecting the work already done by the compaay, the dangers to be met, the weak points to be overcome, and the probable cost of the waterway, the whole thing, when summarized, being so pessimistic as to convey the idea that the commission was appointed with a view of dissuading Congress and the people of the United States from extending to the enterprise that national aid which must be needed to make it a success. The commission reaches the conclusion that all the locks in the canal should have a width of eighty feet: that all streams affecting the canal route should be gauged and rainfall observations made at points along the entire route, and that the final adoption of any route is inexpedient until all alternatives routes have been investigated. In short, the report of this commission damns the canal with faint praise, and is so forceless and ineffective that it might better have been left unwritten. There is this to be said for it, subject, however, to subsequent correction, that it presents figures of construction which give occasion for comment. The canal company's estimate, last year, for the cost of construction, on the low level line, was $69,893,660. The commission's estimate, on the same basis, is $133,472,895. Here is a discrepancy, or difference, of over $63,000,000, which is a thing not to be unconsidered, especially when the United States has in mind the guaranteeing of the enterprise. Manifestly the company or the commission is wrong, and the decision of this question must be left open for the present. There seems to be a disposition to kill the canal proposition, since every conceivable objection to it is paraded in the most forcible way, while the arguments in its favor are kept in the background. The question has not become a political one as yet, since the platforms of both parties have favored the canal, but it will rest very largely with the present Congress to determine what shall be the fate of the watergate between the two great oceans.

We have often denounced the poll tax that is so industriously and energetically collected from men who work for wages, as being a relic of the dark ages and altogether repugnant to ideas of liberty and equality that form the basis of popular government. And just at present there is a thorough demonstration of the unjust manner it has been collected in the past. The deputy county assessors have taken paine, as they are required to do by the law and their oaths office, to gather the poll tax from men who have no real property on which the poll tax can become a lien. They get lists of men who work on ranches, in mills and factories, and take the poll taxes out of their wages at headquarters. Their employers pay these taxes to the poll tax collectors and deduct the amount from the men's wages. That is the law and there is no evading it. But how is it with the men who own real property? No attempt appears to to have been made to get them to pay their poll taxes to the poll tax collector because they have reality on which poll taxes area lien. When, however, they pay their property taxes, no poll tax having been on, none is paid, and the consequence is, about all the poll taxes that are collected are wrung irom poor men who work by the month, some of them for fifteen and twenty dollars a month; and those who are best able to pay these taxes have paid none at all. This way of enforcing the collection of poll taxes an the poor and letting the well-to-do go free should, once it is exposed, cause such a sentiment in favor of the repeal of that odious tax as will compel every candidate for legislative honors and opportunities to pledge himself to vote for the repeal of the law, and have all taxes put on property, and not on men. The poll tax is a remnant of despotism and has no rightful place in a government of the people by the people. It is a hateful discrimination against the poor man, reminding him of a servitude forced upon him by circumstances over which he has no control. Away with it!—Fresno Expositor.

Every miner and prospector reads the Mining and Scientific Press, published at 220 Market St., San Francisco. Its twenty pages weekly give all the mining news, illustrated accounts of the newest and latest in the mining world and its special articles are copied into every mining journal all over the world. Its advertising columns are a complete directory of those who make or sell anything that the miner uses. Its fifty-two issues for the entire year are sent for $3, postpaid, and many a one finds three dollars worth of information in one issue. Mining superintendents, foremen, millmen, assayers, shift bosses, and every one in and around a mine who wants to keep posted, read the Mining and Scientific Press. It also pays attention to electric, scientific and mechanical progress and is read by thousands in every branch of mechanical industry. A sample copy will be sent to any address.

FIRES IN JAPAN.

But For Open Spaces the Japanese Cities Would Burn Up.

One of the quaintest sights in Japan is a fire. Hundreds of houses are often burned in the space of a few hours, and little or nothing can be done to stop the progress of the flames, especially on a windy day. If you except the roof, which is made of tiles, Japanese houses are built entirely of straw wood, bamboo and paper. In the poorer districts houses are packed close together, and therefore if one happens to catch fire sometimes the whole street is burned down with incredible rapidity, and the fire only stops at some open space where it cannot possibly spread further. It is not unusual in Tokyo or some of the larger towns to hear of a thousand or even more houses having been destroyed in an afternoon or during the night.

No one is more afraid of fires than the Japanese, and high ladders are posted at short intervals all over the towns and in all the larger villages, on the top of which ladders a watchman sits all night and in case of fire rings a large bell hanging from the top. If rung at long intervals, the fire is distant, and one need not worry oneself about turning out of one's fountangs. If rung a little quicker, the fire is not far, but there need be no apprehension. But if the bell is vigorously and quickly tolled then you may as well say goodby to your house, because in perhaps a few minutes it will be reduced to a mass of ashes.

The Japanese are wonderful at turning out at all hours of the night, even for going to look at a fire, and men, women and children in the coldest nights in winter think nothing of walking five or six miles to go and look at a big blaze. If the fire happens to be near, the excitement increases in proportion to the probability of one's house being burned down. You see people half scared and screaming, getting water wherever they can in pails, wash basins, tubs or anything they can lay hold of and throwing it all over the woodwork so as to diminish the chances of its catching fire. Then as the fire draws nearer, and the only water available has already been consumed, the process of saving what one can is put into practice. The amido, or wooden shutters, and the sholjis, paper walls, are quickly taken down and brought into a safe place; the mats are lifted out of their places, and with the few articles of furniture are quickly removed. So that when the fire comes it only destroys the wooden frame of the house and the roof. That is all. It is seldom that life is lost in these fires, except sometimes when children or old people are unable to move, and once surrounded by flames they cannot be reached and often perish.—Tokyo Let

Animals Respect One Another's Rights.

Truth forces the observer of nature to admit that birds and other creatures apportion the earth among themselves just about as man does. A bear has his boundaries beyond which his fellow bear does not trespass with impunity—the wild rabbit you see on your lawn in the moonlight is the same innocent little creature you have been seeing every night all the summer time—and even the robin that gathers the early worm for his breakfast from your garden will show fight when another comes marauding on his preserve. Nor does this last a year only, for there is good evidence that the same bird will come back to the claim it staked off the year previous.—Meehan's Monthly.

A Devotee of Browning.

"Some of Browning's works?" repeated the gentlemanly book store clerk. "Certainly, ma'am. Which volumes did you want?"

"Oh," said Mrs. Nurich languidly, "wrap me up a quarter of a dozen."—Chicago Record.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o'clock, a. m., on Thursday, April 9, 1896, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County or the term of one year beginning May 10, 1896, and ending May 9, 1897.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sick properly admitted to contractor's care, on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said Ninth day of April, 1896, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

MARRIED.

INGALLS—MERCER—At Bishop, February 14, 1896, William A. Ingalls of Hawthorne, Nev. and Mrs. Jennie Mercer of Bishop, Cal.

DIED.

CROCKER—At Big Pine, February 17, 1896, Edwin M. Crocker, a native of New York, aged 63 years.

J. D. Lewis Esq. of Bishop spent a few days in town the past week.

Attorney Whith Smith of Bishop was among the arrivals of the past week.

Mrs. J. R. Moffett and Miss Susie Rougny went to Big Pine to-day to visit with relatives.

A. W. Eibeshutz and daughter, Miss Elsie will leave for a visit to the city to-morrow morning.

Walter and Ed. Ober came down from Big Pine last Friday and spent several days in town.

A number of people of Independence and vicinity will attend the celebration at Big Pine this week.

Miss Clara Eldred arrived from Big Pine last Friday and will remain in Independence for a few weeks.

Supt. Austin of Lone Pine spent the past week in town, attending the regular meeting of the Board of Education.

John McBride brought a bunch of forty head of horses down from Nevada last week and is feeding them hay out at the Rawson ranch.

Miss Eva Gunter, Miss Lea Darrah, Miss Garrettson, Miss Jennie Cruz and Mrs. M. E. T. Stevens are visitors from Bishop this week.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hampton arrived from Bishop last Sunday. Mr. Hampton came to attend the regular meeting of the Board of Education.

Among the arrivals of last week who we failed to note was Mrs. D. Samuels of San Francisco, who comes on a visit to her mother, Mrs Lewis.

Miss Kate Arcularius arrived from Round Valley last Saturday. Miss. Arcularius is one of the number who will come before the Board of Education this session.

Wm. Arcularius came in from Darwin the first of the week with his big team and remained here a couple of days, then started for Mojave to bring up a load of machinery.

Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Rickey arrived from Carson on last Friday's train and remained here until Tuesday morning when they went to Bishop by private conveyance.

Miss Grace Collins arrived from Bishop last Saturday and is visiting friends here. Miss Collins intends to leave in a short time for Arizona where she will visit with relatives.

Prof. J. W. Morris, principal of the Inyo Acadamy, returned to Bishop last Tuesday morning, after having spent several days here. Prof. Morris will be down some time in the near future and deliver several lectures while here.

An entertainment will be held at the M. E. Church sometime between the first and fifteenth day of March, for the purpose of raising funds to renew the insurance policy on that building. A literary program will be rendered and refreshments served.

A man named Ramsdell had a runaway last Wednesday. When about two miles south of town a single-tree broke, frightening the team which commenced to run. The pole dropped down and run into the ground and broke off. The team did not get away, however.

Board of Education.

The Board of Education met in regular session last Monday, all the members being present except Mrs. L. Rhine. The following named are taking the examination for grammer grade certificates: Miss Kate Arcularius, Miss Clara Reynolds, Miss Eva Gunter, Miss Jennie Cruz, Miss Lea Darrah, Miss Garrettson, Miss Gregory, Mrs. M. E. T. Stevens and George W. Dixon. For primary grade, Mr. Patrick. Frank Moore and F. C. Scott will be granted certificates on credentials.

Correspondence.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—I wish to state through the medium of your paper, to all whom it may concern—and it apparently concerns a large number—that the article which appeared in the Inyo Register some time since, in which certain allegations were made concerning the conduct of some of the County Officers at a dance in this neighborhood, was not written by me.

I am in this district to teach the Taboose School, and though I have but seven pupils, I have no time to busy myself with my neighbor's affairs. The writer of the article in the Register evidently was more (or less) fortunate. The conduct of County officers at dances or else where is no concern of mine. I am not a voter, and so in no way responsible for the kind of men who hold offices. I learned only this morning that I was wearing another's laurels, and not wishing to keep what does not rightfully belong to me, I hasten to disclaim the authorship of the article, (which I have not read,) and to assure the writer that the honor (?) was thrust upon me. If he had had the courage to append his signature, he would have received his meed of credit, and I would not have been cumbered with "the burden of an honor unto which I was not born"

For the benefit of those who have imputed to me this unworthy action I will say, I have no literary aspirations, and if I had, would not indulge in that class of fiction.

MABEL F. DOSS.

Another Gone

Edwin M. Crocker died at Big Pine last Monday about noon. He came into town that morning from the ranch, and was in the blacksmith shop conversing with his nephew, Fred Crocker, when he suddenly put his hand over his heart and said "I have a terrible pain there," and at the same time taking a chew of tobacco from his mouth. He immediately commenced to fall and was caught by those standing near and laid gently down where he expired in a few minutes. An examination was held without any result and Dr Dorrance of Bishop was sent for, and a post-mortem examination was made, when it was discovered that a large bloodvessel near the heart was broken for the length of near an inch. The deceased up to that time had been enjoying good health. The funeral ceremonies were held last Tuesday, at the school house, from where a large number of friends followed the remains to the grave. Edwin M. Crocker was born in the State of New York, and was sixty-three years of age. He was for a while a resident of Bakersfield and from there came to this county and settled at Big Pine where he has since resided.

Clippings From Blackrock.

A number of our citizens are expecting to take in the festivities at Big Pine the 21st and 22nd.

G. D. Calvert is home again after having made several trips as extra brakesman. Mathew Duke performed the pump act during Mr. Calverts absence.

Col. A. A. Neil is having his new store room plastered and will move his stock of goods in as soon as possible.

Capt. Luke Smith returned last week from a trip to Pixley, Tulare Co. He hes been away nearly a month, and judging from appearances, camping aggred with him.

Mr. James Jenkins, who has recently moved on to the old Tibbetts place, has workmen employed pruning the orchard, preparing the land for cultivation and otherwise improving the appearances of the grounds. NONPAREIL.

Chats By The Lakeside

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Mr. J. B. Newlon came in last stage Monday morning and left for Bishop Tuesday morning. He has been in Bowie, A. T. for some time and goes to visit relatives in Bishop

A party named Wicks or Weeks was an outward bound passenger on the Monday evening stage. He seemed to want to find a healthier climate than Inyo and said he did not want to "tar"ry here too long as feathers were plentiful in Independence. Did the vigilance committee scare him?

O. G. Fuentes is going to open up one or two mines near Beveridge soon.

Mr. S. H. Sylvester, the boss carpenter from Lone Pine, came down to Keeler Monday and is remodeling Boland's store through-out. New shelving, new flooring and ceiling and other improvements are the order of the day and when finished the store will be second to none in the county.

Mr. John Barnes, one of our solid citizens, left for Los Angeles this week in company with Wm. Arcularius on the big freight wagon.

Mrs. J. Rose of Independence is visiting this week with her daughter, Mrs. J. J. Morton.

J. B. Obrien of Candelaria passed through Keeler last week on his way to Modock, where he found employment at Fitzgerald's mines.

Jack Curran of Modock came in with F. Eitzgerald Tuesday and will go to Lone Pine Thursda. He is quite sick.

Horace Elder goes to Modock and Snow's Canyon Thursday with Arthur Smith to fix a pipe line for the Argus Gold Mining Co.

J. G. Dodge of Lone Pine starts out for Snow's Canyon Friday with a small load grain, hay and supplies for E. C. Garlick.

Anthony's stage came in from Darwin in two sections Wednesday. Business must be improving in the south end.

J. Judge and Chas. Holland went to George's Creek for a vacation this week and returned Wednesday.

Work on the Lone Pine canal is progressing very well near Lone Pine and the canal is in better shape than it has been for years. It will be of immense benefit to land in the vicinity of Lone Pine and the head of the lake.

The following conversation was overheard on our streets:

"They say they hain't got no vegetables at Lone Pine."

"None 'tall?"

"Well, yes, they've got some potatoes but they're sunburnt."

"Sunburnt, hey!"

"Yes they turn green and yeller when they cook 'em."

"Deep Yeller?"

"Yes."

"That's orange. Orange and green, hey?"

"Yes, singular hain't it?"

"Nothing strange 'bout that."

"Why?"

"'Cos they're Irish Potatoes, see?"

Yours Truthfully.

Pasevitch

The Photographer, is coming to Independence, March 5th, and will remain only a short time. Any one appreciating good work will find Pasevitch is the only photographer in Inyo County producing first-class pictures. This is no paper talk, but it is proven by the enormous lot of work we turned out for the people in Bishop. Our motto is "good work or no pay." Price for cabinets, $3 per dozen. One extra large picture given away with every dozen cabinets. Look at our PLATINO WORK. Examine our large photograph at the Post Office.

Leap Year Ball.

The Leap Year ball last Friday evening was an all-around success. About twenty couples were present, and an excellent supper was served at midnight. Music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Tucker, and dancing was continued until a late hour, when the departing crowd carried away a pleasant rememberance of the first Leap Year ball of the season.

He Satisfied His Conscience.

It was under some of the earlier bankrupt laws that this exhibtion of rare shrewdness occurred, when it was required that in case of a man's insolvency he must turn over to the proper officer of the law every bit of his property for the benefit of his creditors. The subject of this story was yet a young man and wealthy when misfortune overtook him and failure was inevitable. Some of his property was real estate, some of it was not, the latter consisting of securities easily converted into currency. A nice little bundle of bank bills could be more safely handled than certificates of stocks, etc. When the time came, being an honorable man, he conscientiously surrendered his entire effects, even a tubular cane from which the handle could be disjointed, the gift of an admiring friend. After handing the walking stick to the official, thus satisfying the law, he suggested its return. It was a present from a friend and could be of little value to any one but himself as a memento.

"Certainly," said the officer. "Take it. It's of no value to us."

"Thanks! I'll prize it highly."

Some time afterward in his quiet home the shrewd financier disjointed the handle and removed from his tubular depository several thousand dollars of well crumpled bank bills.—Syracuse Post.

The Smoker's Paradise.

The whole Philippine archipelago is the smoker's paradise. Quantities of tobacco of the finest flavors grow in tropic luxuriance on the uplands, and every one is an adept at smoking. Boys and girls of 10 use the weed hourly and roll their own cigars with the deftness of their parents. It is a common sight to see in the streets of Manilla father and mother sauntering along with enormous cigars in their mouths and followed by five or six children, varying in ages from 10 to 20, all smoking. At the little theater in Manilla, where a few performances are given in each winter's season, every one smokes, and the roof is so arranged that the smoky air can pass quickly away. In every home, whether in the country or in the heart of Manilla, there are always heaps of dried tobacco leaves, tied in bunches, upon the floor or in a shed near the house, and the provident Tagal lays in a stock of tobacco for household purposes several times a year as carefully as the American does the family supply of potatoes or flour. Strange as it may seem, very little tobacco is exported, and the reason given is that the Spanish, for their own reasons, have discouraged and ruined the exportation of the weed.—New York Times.

Symbolism.

When you study the vast subject of symbolism, as has Professor D'Arcy Wentworth Thompson, you are just as likely as not to be swamped. In a recent comprehensive study Professor Thompson works in the direction of the heavenly bodies and the condition of the sky at certain periods. Lions, eagles and all animals or birds have, as symbols, something to do with the skies. It is true, as the learned professor states, that the Pleiades are very much mixed up with the names and images of birds. "The Hen and Chickens" is English for the Pleiades, and in many languages expressive of the same constellation there are birds.

Carrying his ideas to their furthest limits, Professor Thompson believes that all coins have their typical animals, birds or fish, derived from the same celestial source, but the queerest conjecture is one in regard to the old ratio existing between silver and gold. That ratio having been 13.3 to 1, the professor calmly asks whether that is not an evidence "that this ratio is precisely identical with the ratio of the solar year to the lunar month—namely, 365 to 27.4." When you make up your mind to go in for symbolism, there is no knowing where it may land you.

Charon's Boat.

On one of the lakes in the north island of New Zealand, near Auckland, there was a hotel much frequented by fishermen. On one occasion, when a gentleman, whom I will call Mr. X., was staying there, he was taken seriously ill, and the landlord, supposing that he could not possibly recover, began to think of making preparations for his visitor's death. Knowing a man who was a pretty fair carpenter and had owed him money for some time and seeing little chance of being repaid, he told him to make a coffin for the sick man. The coffin was duly made, but Mr. X., instead of dying, as he ought to have done, recovered, and there was therefore no use for the coffin.

The landlord, not caring to be at the expense, included a charge for it in Mr. X.'s bill, who, on seeing it, naturally enough demurred to paying for something which he had not ordered and did not want. The landlord said it was very hard that the loss should fall on him, as he had only done it for the best, and Mr. X. at last agreed to pay for it. Determined to turn it to some account, he had a keel put to it and used it as a fishing punt during the remainder of his stay at the hotel.—Realm.

Others Have Sighed For This Too.

The late Oliver Wendell Holmes, says the London Queen, loved all kinds of knickknacks connected with writing materials. There was a large drawer in his library table in his town house "on" Beacon street, Boston, which contained endless neat little divisions, full of the various articles of stationery which he used. The one which he was most anxious to possess was not invented in his lifetime, and I do not think that it has been invented yet. The great little doctor wanted, and believed in the possibility of a typewriter no bigger than a cigar case, containing so many sheets of paper 4 inches by 2. As soon as the top sheet was full it was to be changed automatically by the machine—which was, in fact, a typewriter notebook. Fancy the luxury of rough notes written with a typewriter instead of in blurred and untidy pencil scrawl.

CHAPTER V.

It is just as well perhaps that the matter had become notorious. Otherwise the Armours had lived in that unpleasant condition of being constantly "discovered." It was simply a case of aiming at absolute secrecy, which had been frustrated by Frank himself, or bold and unembarrassed acknowledgment and an attempt to carry things off with a high hand. The latter course was the only one possible. It had originally been Richard's idea, appropriated by General Armour and accepted by Mrs. Armour and Marion with what grace was possible. The publication of the event prepared their friends and precluded the necessity for reserve. What the friends did not know was whether they ought or ought not to commiserate the Armours. It was a difficult position. A death, an accident, a lost reputation, would have been easy to them. Concerning these there could be no doubt. But an Indian daughter-in-law, a person in moccasins, was scarcely a thing to be congratulated upon, and yet sympathy and consolation might be much misplaced. No one could tell how the Armours would take it, for even their closest acquaintances knew what kind of delicate hauteur was possible to them. Even the "'centric" Richard, who visited the cottages of the poor, carrying soup and luxuries of many kinds, accompanying them with the most wholesome advice a single man ever gave to families and the heads of families, whose laugh was so cheery and spontaneous—and face so uncommonly grave and sad at times—had a faculty for manner. With astonishing suddenness he could raise insurmountable barriers, and people not of his order, who occasionally presumed on his simplicity of life and habits, found themselves put distinctly ill at ease by a quiet, curious look in his eye. No man was ever more the recluse and at the same time the man of the world. He had had his bitter little comedy of life, but it was different from that of his brother Frank. It was buried very deep. Not one of his family knew of it. Edward Lambert and one or two others who had good reason never to speak of it were the only persons possessing his secret.

But all England knew of Frank's mesalliance. And the question was, What would people do? They very properly did nothing at first. They waited to see how the Armours would act; they did not congratulate; they did not console. That was left to those papers which chanced to resent General Armour's politics and those others which were emotional and sensational on every subject, particularly so where women were concerned.

It was the beginning of the season, but the Armours had decided that they would not go to town—that is, the general and his wife were not going. They felt that they ought to be at Greyhope with their daughter-in-law, which was to their credit. Regarding Marion they had nothing to say. Mrs. Armour inclined to her going to town for the season to visit Mrs. Townley, who had thoughtfully written to her saying that she was very lonely and begging Mrs. Armour to let her come, if she would. She said that of course Marion would see much of her people in town just the same. Mrs. Townley was a very clever and tactful woman. She guessed that General Armour and his wife were not likely to come to town, but that must not appear, and the invitation should be on a different basis, as it was.

It is probable that Marion saw through the delicate plot, but that did not make her like Mrs. Townley less. These little pieces of art make life possible—these tender fictions!

Marion was, however, not in good humor. She was nervous and a little petulant. She had a high strung temperament, a sensitive perception of the fitness of things and a horror of what was gauche, and she would, in brief, make a rather austere person if the lines of life did not run in her favor. She had something of Frank's impulsiveness and temper. It would have been a great blessing to her if she had had a portion of Richard's philosophical humor also. She was at a point of tension—her mother and Richard could see that. She was anxious—though, for the world, she would not have had it thought so—regarding Captain Vidall. She had never cared for anybody but him. It was possible she never would. But he did not know this, and she was not absolutely sure that his evident but as yet informal love would stand this strain, which shows how people very honorable and perfect minded in themselves may allow a large margin to other people who are presumably honorable and perfect minded also.

There was no engagement between them, and he was not bound in any way, and could, therefore, without slashing the hem of the code, retire without any apology, but they had had that unspoken understanding which most people who love each other show even before a word of declaration has passed their lips. If he withdrew because of this scandal, there might be some awkward hours for Frank Armour's wife at Greyhope, but more than that there would be a very hard hearted young lady to play her part in the deceitful world. She would be as merciless as she could be. Naturally, being young, she exaggerated the importance of the event and brooded on it. It was different with her father and mother. They were shocked and indignant at first, but when the first scene had been faced they began to make the best of things all round—that is, they proceeded at once to turn the North American Indian into a European, a matter of no little difficulty. A governess was discussed, but General Armour did not like the idea, and Richard opposed it heartily. She must be taught English and educated and made possible "in Christian clothing," as Mrs. Armour put it. Of the education they almost despaired—all save Richard. Time, instruction, vanity and a dressmaker might do much as to the other.

The evening of her arrival Lali would not, with any urging, put on clothes of Marion's which had been sent in to her. And the next morning it was still the same. She came into the breakfast room dressed still in buckskin and moccasins, and though the grease had been taken out of her hair it was still combed flat. Mrs. Armour had tried to influence her through Mackenzie, but to no purpose. She was placidly stubborn. It had been unwisely told her by Mackenzie that they were Marion's clothes. They scarcely took in the fact that the girl had pride; that she was the daughter of a chief and a chieftainess herself, and that it was far from happy to offer her Marion's clothes to wear.

Now, Richard, when he was a lad, had been on a journey to the south seas and had learned some of the peculiarities of the native mind, and he did not suppose that American Indians differed very much from certain well bred Polynesians in little matters of form and good taste. When his mother told him what had occurred before Lali entered the breakfast room, he went directly to what he believed was the cause and advised tact with conciliation. He also pointed out that Lali was something taller than Marion, and that she might be possessed of that general trait of humanity—vanity. Mrs. Armour had not yet got used to thinking of the girl in another manner than an intrusive being of a lower order who was there to try their patience, but also to do their bidding. She had yet to grasp the fact that, being her son's wife, she must have therefore a position in the house, exercising a certain authority over the servants, who, to Mrs. Armour, at first seemed of superior stuff. But Richard said to her: "Mother, I fancy you don't quite grasp the situation. The girl is a daughter of a chief and the descendant of a family of chiefs, perhaps through many generations. In her own land she has been used to respect and has been looked up to pretty generally. Her garments are, I fancy, considered very smart in the Hudson bay country, and a finely decorated blanket like hers is expensive up there. You see, we have to take the thing by comparison, so please give the girl a chance."

And Mrs. Armour answered wearily: "I suppose you are right, Richard. You generally are in the end, though why you should be I do not know, for you never see anything of the world any more, and you moon about among the cottagers. I suppose it's your native sense and the books you read."

Richard laughed softly, but there was a queer ring in the laugh, and he came over stumblingly and put his arm round his mother's shoulder. "Never mind how I get such sense as I have, mother. I have so much time to think it would be a wonder if I hadn't some. But I think we had better try to study her and coax her along and not fob her off as a very inferior person, or we shall have our hands full in earnest. My opinion is she has got that which will save her and us, too—a very high spirit, which only needs opportunity to develop into a remarkable thing, and, take my word for it, mother, if we treat her as a chieftainess, or princess, or whatever she is, and not simply as a dusky person, we shall come off better, and she will come off better in the long run. She is not darker than a Spaniard anyhow."

At this point Marion entered the room, and her mother rehearsed briefly to her what their talk had been. Marion had had little sleep, and she only lifted her eyebrows at them at first. She was in little mood of conciliation. She remembered all at once that at supper the evening before her sister-in-law had said "How!" to the butler and had eaten the mayonnaise with a dessert spoon. But presently, because she saw they waited for her to speak, she said, with a little flutter of maliciousness:

"Wouldn't it be well for Richard—he has plenty of time, and we are also likely to have it now—to put us all through a course of instruction for the training of chieftainesses? And when do you think she will be ready for a drawing room—her majesty Queen Victoria's or ours?"

"Marion!" said Mrs. Armour severely, but Richard came round to her, and with his fresh, childlike humor put his arm round her waist and added, "Marion, I'd be willing to bet (if I were in the habit of betting) my shaky old pins here against a lock of your hair that you may present her at any drawing room—ours or Queen Victoria's—in two years if we go at it right, and it would serve Master Frank very well if we turned her out something, after all."

Mrs. Armour said almost eagerly: "I wish it were only possible, Richard. And what you say is true, I suppose—that she is of rank in her own country, whatever value that may have."

Richard saw his advantage. "Well, mother," he said, "a chieftainess is a chieftainess, and I don't know but to announce her as such and"——

"And be proud of it, as it were," put in Marion, "and pose her and make her a prize—a Pocahontas, wasn't it?—and go on pretending world without end!" Marion's voice was still slightly grating, but there was in it, too, a faint sound of hope. "Perhaps," she said to herself, "Richard is right."

At this point the door opened, and Lali entered, shown in by Colvin, her newly appointed maid, and followed by Mackenzie, and, as we said, dressed still in her heathenish garments. She had a strong sense of dignity, for she stood still and waited. Perhaps nothing could have impressed Marion more. Had Lali been subservient simply, an entirely passive, unintelligent creature, she would probably have tyrannized over her in a soft, persistent fashion and despised her generally. But Mrs. Armour and Marion saw that this stranger might become very troublesome indeed if her temper were to have play. They were aware of capacities for passion in those dark eyes, so musing, yet so active in expression, which moved swiftly from one object to another and then suddenly became resolute.

Both mother and daughter came forward and held out their hands, wishing her a pleasant good morning, and were followed by Richard and immediately by General Armour, who had entered soon after her. She had been keen enough to read, if a little vaguely, behind the scenes, and her mind was wakening slowly to the peculiarity of the position she occupied. The place awed her and had broken her rest by perplexing her mind, and she sat down to the breakfast table with a strange, hunted look in her face. But opposite to her was a window opening to the ground, and beyond it were the limes and beeches and a wide, perfect sward and far away a little lake, on which swans and wild fowl fluttered.

Presently, as she sat silent, eating little, her eyes lifted to the window. They flashed instantly, her face lighted up with a weird kind of charm, and suddenly she got to her feet with Indian exclamations on her lips, and, as if unconscious of them all, went swiftly to the window and out of it, waving her hands up and down once or twice to the trees and the sunlight.

"What did she say?" said Mrs. Armour, rising with the others.

"She said," replied Mackenzie as she hurried toward the window, "that they were her beautiful woods, and there were wild birds flying and swimming in the water, as in her own country."

By this time all were at the window, Richard arriving last, and the Indian girl turned on them, her body all quivering with excitement, laughed a low, birdlike laugh, and then, clapping her hands above her head, she swung round and ran like a deer toward the lake, shaking her head back as an animal does when fleeing from his pursuers. She would scarcely have been recognized as the same placid, speechless woman in a blanket who sat with folded hands day after day on the Aphrodite.

The watchers turned and looked at each other in wonder. Truly their task of civilizing a savage would not lack in interest. The old general was better pleased, however, at this display of activity and excitement than at yesterday's taciturnity. He loved spirit, even if it had to be subdued, and he thought on the instant that he might possibly come to look upon the fair savage as an actual and not a nominal daughter-in-law. He had a keen appreciation of courage, and he thought he saw in her face, as she turned upon them, a look of defiance or daring, and nothing could have got at his nature quicker. If the case had not been so near to his own hearthstone, he would have chuckled. As it was, he said good humoredly that Mackenzie and Marion should go and bring her back. But Mackenzie was already at that duty. Mrs. Armour had had the presence of mind to send for Colvin, but presently, when the general spoke, she thought it better that Marion should go and counseled returning to breakfast and not making the matter of too much importance. This they did, Richard very reluctantly, while Marion, rather pleased than not at the spirit shown by the strange girl, ran away over the grass toward the lake, where Lali had now stopped.

There was a little bridge at one point where the lake narrowed, and Lali, evidently seeing it all at once, went toward it and ran up on it, standing poised above the water about the middle of it. For an instant an unpleasant possibility came into Marion's mind—suppose the excited girl intended suicide! She shivered as she thought of it, and yet— She put that horribly cruel and selfish thought away fom her with an indignant word at herself. She had passed Mackenzie and come first to the lake. Here she slackened and waved her hand playfully to the girl, so as not to frighten her, and then with a forced laugh came up panting on the bridge and was presently by Lali's side. Lali eyed her a little furtively, but seeing that Marion was much inclined to be pleasant she nodded to her, said some Indian words hastily and spread out her hands toward the water. As she did so Marion noticed again the beauty of those hands and the graceful character of the gesture, so much so that she forgot the flat hair, and the unstayed body, and the rather broad feet, and the delicate duskiness, which had so worked on her in imagination and in fact the evening before. She put her hand kindly on that long slim hand stretched out beside her, and because she knew not what else to speak and because the tongue is very perverse at times, saying the opposite of what is expected, she herself blundered out, "How, how, Lali!"

Perhaps Lali was as much surprised at the remark as Marion herself and certainly very much more delighted. The sound of those familiar words, spoken by accident, as they were, opened the way to a better understanding as nothing else could possibly have done. Marion was annoyed at herself and yet amused too. If her mind had been perfectly assured regarding Captain Vidall, it is probable that then and there a peculiar, a genial, comradeship would have been formed. As it was, Marion found this little event more endurable than she expected. She also found that Lali, when she laughed in pleasant acknowledgment of that "How" had remarkably white and regular teeth. Indeed Marion Armour began to discover some estimable points in the appearance of her savage sister-in-law. Marion remarked to herself that Lali might be a rather striking person if she were dressed, as her mother said, in Christian garments and could speak the English language well—and was somebody else's sister-in-law.

At this point Mackenzie came breathlessly to the bridge and called out a sharply to Lali, rebuking her. In this Mackenzie made a mistake, for not only did Lali draw herself up with considerable dignity, but Marion, noticing the masterful nature of the tone, instantly said: "Mackenzie, you must remember that you are speaking to Mrs. Francis Armour, and that her position in General Armour's house is the same as mine. I hope it is not necessary to say anything more, Mackenzie."

A Bug That Can Cut Metal.

The Zopherus melicanus is the only known species of American beetle that has strength enough in its mandibles to cut metal. This curious faculty of zopherus was accidentally discovered by F. W. Devoe, a member of the New York Microscopical society. A friend had sent Mr. Devoe some specimens of this queer species of bug from the northern states of South America. The microscopist was busily engaged when the insects arrived and simply provided temporary quarters for the creatures in a glass jar having a metal top, in which the porcelain cap was wanting. Within less than 48 hours they had cut holes in the metal sufficient to get their heads through, and would soon have escaped had their operations remained undetected. By careful experiment Mr. Devoe found that the force necessary to do such cutting was equal to 869 grams.

JEFFERSON M. CLOUGH REFUSES A TEMPTING OFFER FROM THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT.

His Health was too Poor to Permit Attention to Business. A Great Sufferer for Many Years But Has Now Recovered.

(From the Springfield, Mass., Union.)

There isn't a gun manufacturer in the United States, who does not know Jefferson M. Clough, and why? Because he has been intimately associated all his life with the development of the two best American rifles, the Remington and Winchester. For years he was Superintendent of the E. Remington & Sons' great factory at Ilion, N. Y. After leaving there he refused a tempting offer of the Chinese Government to go to China to superintend their government factories—and accepted instead the superintendency of the Winchester-Arms Co., at New Haven, at a salary of $7,500 a year.

It was after this long term of active labor as a business man that he found himself incapacitated for further service by the embargo which rheumatism had laid upon him and resigned his position more than two years ago, and returned to Belchertown, Mass., where he now lives and owns the Phelps farm, a retired spot where he has five hundred acres of land. Being a man of means he did not spare the cost and was treated by leading physicians and by baths at celebrated springs without receiving any benefit worth notice. During the summer of 1893 and the winter of 1894 Mr. Clough was confined to his house in Belchertown, being unable to rise from his bed without assistance, and suffering continually with acute pains and with no taste or desire for food, nor was he able to obtain sufficient sleep.

Early in the year 1894 Mr. Clough heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He began taking these pills about the first of March 1894 and continued to do so until the first part of September following. The first effect noticed was a better appetite and he began to note more ability to help himself off the bed and to be better generally. Last August (1894) he was able to go alone to his summer residence and farm of 163 acres on Grenadier Island, among the Thousand Islands, in the river St. Lawrence, where from the highest land of his farm he commands a view for 13 miles down the river, and 60 of the Thousand Islands can be seen.

Instead of being confined to his bed Mr. Clough is now and has been for some time able to be about the farm to direct the men employed there and he is thankful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for him.

These pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and are never sold in bulk. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

How Proud He Was.

Sir John Hopkins, admiral of the British fleet which came here on the occasion of the Columbian celebration of 1893, appeared on deck in a fine new uniform and said to Julian Ralph, who was his guest on the Blake at the time: "Will you look at me? I beg you to do me the favor to look at me." "Sir John," said Ralph, "I should think you would feel proud." "Pr-oud, me boy!" said Sir John; "I'm as pr-oud as a puppy dog with a gladiolus in his mouth."

Chivalry.

The word chivalry is from the French chevalerie, riders on horses. Chivalry as an institution was in its prime from about the beginning of the tenth century to about the close of the fifteenth. A century added for its growth and another for its decline will cover its total history.

THE VOICE OF A PATRIOT.

At least one speaker at the Chamber of Commerce meeting produced a sentiment which has the ring of true metal. That is Mr. F. C. Moore, President of the Continental Insurance Company, who said:

"I would rather see every dollar I have in the world burned up for fuel under the boilers of a battle ship, than to see this country take any other stand than accords with its dignity and self-respect."

This is worth preserving. It breathes the spirit that makes a nation something more than an aggregation of individuals variously engaged in the pursuit of riches.

The Evening Post's report of the meeting asserts that the utterance of this patriotic sentiment was greeted with cries of "Oh! Oh!" from different parts of the room. If these alleged interjections were intended to express incredulity, they were insulting to the speaker. If meant to indicate dissent they were highly discreditable to those American citizens who raised their voices against such a declaration as that which Mr. Moore had just made.

Every great national crisis has discovered not tens, or hundreds, but thousands and tens of thousands of patriots willing and ready to give their all to the cause in which their hearts are enlisted. Why should it seem strange to any member of the New York Chamber of Commerce that an American is prepared to burn every dollar he owns under the boilers of a battle ship rather than sacrifice his country's honor? Is there anything extravagant in that?

Dearer than all the dollars a man may have accumulated is life itself; and are the instances so rare in our history where life itself has been freely and joyfully given?—N. Y. Sun.

THE ABSENCE OF IT.

If there is any truth in the saying that happiness is the absence of all pain, mental and physical, the enjoyment of it can only be found in heaven. But so far as the physical is concerned, it is within easy reach; at least measurably so, as far as cure will go. The sum of human misery in this line is made up of greater or less degrees of physical suffering. The minor aches and pains which afflict mankind are easy to reach and as easily cured. There are none in the whole category, which, if taken in time, cannot be cured. They must in some form afflict the nerves, the bones, the muscles and joints of the human body. They are all more or less hurtful and wasteful to the system. St. Jacobs Oil is made to cure them, to search out hidden pain spots, and to cure promptly in a true remedial and lasting way. Very, very many have not known happiness for years till they used it, and very many are putting off cure and happiness because they don't use it.

THE LOST JEWELS.

Ting! Ting! Ting!

The electric bell over Detective Martinot's desk told him he was wanted in the office of the chief of the secret service. Opening a large glass door he stood before his superior. The latter motioned him to a chair. "Tell me," he said, "if you have been reading the newspapers and are posted upon the Niantic disaster."

"The Niantic," said Mr. Martinot, running the case over in his mind and speaking in the bright, quick way which so pleased the chief, "was an apartment house, an old fashioned, aristocratic structure, facing Washington square. At midnight, a month ago, it burned to the ground with great loss of life. The fire is supposed to have originated in an explosion in an upper story, caused in some mysterious way by the gas with which most of the tenants heated their rooms."

"Good," said the chief. "Now I have only to tell you wherein this fire concerns us. There visited here today Henry Williams, the famous diamond collector, whose apartments were in the Niantic, and he tells me that on the night of the fire he was robbed of his fortune in jewels, $250,000 being stolen."

"And you wish me"—

"To talk with Henry Williams, get the points of the robbery and recover the missing gems for him. And—I would suggest that in tracing the robbery you may find that the Niantic was set on fire. This involves a case of manslaughter, as lives were lost. In short, it will be the biggest case of the year. And I have in my hand a letter from the Empire Fire Insurance offering $10,000 reward for the discovery of the origin of the fire."

"When do I begin?"

"Right away. You will find Henry Williams in the reception room."

Detective Martinot bowed in his usual quiet manner and stepped across the hall to where Collector Williams sat, nervously waiting to tell his story.

"Before you begin," said Mr. Martinot, "tell me why you have waited a month before coming here."

"I have been expecting to find the jewels in the ruins of the building, especially as I have offered immense rewards to the workmen."

"And when did the idea of their being stolen enter your mind?"

"I had a suspicion the night of the fire. But it was too vague to put in words. You must have read that I was the first to give the alarm and the last to leave the building. The fact is that I was awakened that night by a sound in my rooms. And, always on the alert for my jewels, I arose, and, lighting a taper, I stepped out into my private hallway to go to the front room where the jewels were hidden in a safe in the wall. As I did so I heard a swift sound, as though some one was running. It was the merest movement, but it alarmed me, and, fearing to make a mark of myself, I blew out the taper and picked up my revolver. An uncanny something seemed to rush past me; but, recovering myself, I flew after it to my hall door. It was closed, and all was still again. 'It's my imagination,' I said to myself. But I went into the front room to look after the jewels.

"I was about to put my hand in the safe, which was behind the picture, when I was startled by a terrific explosion, which seemed to blow the roof off the house. I rushed back along my hallway and threw open the door. The big hall was filling with smoke, and, with a sudden fear for the people in the house, I ran along, knocking on all the doors and calling on everybody to awaken.

"Then, flying back to my rooms, I slipped on some clothing, put my watch and money in my pocket, and ran to my front room for my jewel casket. I put my hand in the safe in the wall, but the casket was not there! Across the room was another and similar safe, and, hurrying across, I was about to move the picture from in front of it when a fireman rushed in, shouting: 'Run for your life. The main staircase is on fire!' I would have waited even then, but he seized me by the shoulders and forced me to the iron fire escape, which was already hot with the tongues of flame.

"Even then I did not forget the jewels. But, knowing they were in the solid iron casket, I reasoned that they would fall through into the ruins, and that I should recover the box entire. Even if its fastenings melted away there were steel drawers, absolutely fireproof.

"I did not leave the scene, and with this idea in my mind I have haunted the ruins night and day. And now the fact of not finding them, taken with the recollections of that night, convinces me that they were stolen from me before the fire. And there is something else.

"That same night my old housekeeper, who occupies a room on the floor above me, slept very uneasily. Finally she rose, seeing a light burning in the front apartment, where she was sure she had left none, and was about to investigate it when—when the explosion occurred. It was so near her that she was overcome with smoke and escaped with difficulty, flame seeming to be all around her.

"And still more singular. Yesterday Sarah hobbled out for the first time and naturally turned her steps toward her burned home, where they are still busy with the ruins, and while she stood there a plainly dressed woman came along, wearing on her hand a brilliant marquise ring, one which Sarah thought she recognized as one of my collection."

"Would you recognize your jewels," asked Mr. Martinot, "if they had been taken from their settings?"

"As quickly as I would my own fingers," stretching out the long slender hand of a student. "And I will give you my gem catalogue, with each described in it. And upon all," making a very tiny mark, "there is this sign, easily seen with a pocket microscope—my own particular trademark."

"There is one thing certain," he mused as he put on his hat and coat. "Henry Williams was robbed of those jewels and before the fire. So the Niantic was probably set on fire by some one—the one who took the jewels. But it looks a little dark now. The crime was at night. It wasn't the old servant. Women do not work at night. Yet the step was a light one. It was a gentleman, then, with whom we have to deal, not a hard footed servant. And when he slipped out so lightly he had that casket with him, hiding it under his coat, of course. That iron casket was heavy and conspicuous, and the first idea was to get rid of it. To do this he must take it to a safe place, break it open and get the jewels out. The Niantic was opposite the park, so of course he would carry the casket over there, and after putting the jewels in his pocket throw the case in the shrubbery. It was found next morning and ought now to be in the recovered articles department."

This line of reasoning so impressed Detective Martinot that he hurried away to the park. Sure enough, the casket had been found, supposed to be dropped by some one running from the burning building. It was empty.

"I declare, it is heavy," observed Mr. Martinot, lifting it. "I wonder that the thief took the trouble to carry it out of the building. Why did he not throw it into the flames or drop it in the hall? It would never have been noticed in the confusion. No wonder that in the hurry of emptying it he dropped a ring—the ring old Sarah saw on the girl's hand. I must visit the pawnshops to see if he has sold the rest of them yet."

When Moses Mendle saw Detective Martinot enter, he was not pleased. "Nothing in your line," he called out before the door closed.

"Come, come, Moses, I've an inducement for you," said Mr. Martinot, taking out a roll of bills. "The fact is some very valuable pieces of jewelry have been taken—special pets of the owner—and if you know where they are or can get them I'll pay the pledged price and a nice bonus, providing you tell me the name of the person who brought them here."

Martinot's description and the sight of the money tempted Moses.

"Come to think of it," he said, "a man did leave some very good rings," pulling out a package with three glistening beauties inside, so brilliant that Mr. Martinot could not repress an exclamation of pleasure, "but I can't give his name."

Reluctantly, but with his eyes upon the greenbacks, Moses finally wrote down a name. Mr. Martinot looked at it and whistled.

"Now, what in the world," thought he as he walked away with the rings in his coat pocket, "can Connor, the green goods king, mean by stealing the Williams diamonds?"

In the office of the secret service there is a great volume of personals, and in this Mr. Martinot read: "Connor, George; born in Connecticut; horseman, bookmaker, reputed wealthy; in green goods transactions; fine looking." Then followed a line a few days old: "Implicated in green goods work; sent to Sing Sing for a year."

"Ah, so he may have been in town recently. And now he must tell me the story of those rings." An upward bound train found Detective Martinot on his way to Sing Sing. "I want to see Connor," he said to the warden.

Showing his secret service badge to the green goods king, he said abruptly: "I've come to see you about those rings you pawned with Mendle. I mean these. They were stolen property, and I confiscated them, you see."

"My dear officer," said Connor, glancing carelessly, though Mr. Martinot thought uneasily, at the rings, "you are mistaken, and so is Mendle if he says I pawned them. I never saw them before in my life."

"Better think a minute," cautioned Mr. Martinot. "They are part of the Williams collection stolen from the Niantic the night she burned, but you know more about it than I. Anything more to say?"

Connor shook his head.

"Good day. Oh, something else! Here's a letter I brought up for you from your hotel. It's from a lady, postmarked New Haven. Scented. She couldn't have known you were here when she wrote. Look! Mr. Jack Connor. A friend probably. I'm going up there today. Any word?"

"Only that it's fortunate for you I'm behind these bars."

"Capital!" soliloquized Mr. Martinot on the train. "He holds his tongue because this woman's in the scrape. I'll have to put a little personal in tomorrow's Planet from her. Then I'll come up and see Connor again."

Next morning, when Mr. Martinot visited Sing Sing, George Connor was reading this personal: "Jack—Tell all. Give up jewels. New Haven."

"Your ruse is admirable," said Connor with a smile, but nevertheless ill at ease. "Unfortunately I have nothing to tell you."

Mr. Martinot went back to the city. "I was way off the truth," said he, "or Connor would have been deceived. He hasn't the jewels. The woman has them. Fortunately I know she is in New Haven, and still more fortunately that Connor isn't allowed to write to his friends for three days yet. The warden says the letter writing takes place then. I must go to New Haven, and if I can't locate a young, pretty woman—she is young and pretty—in three days I'd better resign my position in the service. I'll put up at the best hotel and go everywhere."

"Anything going on tonight," asked Martinot of the hotel clerk in New Haven, "besides the ball in the hall? No? Then I'll trouble you to send for tickets for me. And, by the way, I shall want a dress suit. Traveling for pleasure, I left mine home."

An hour later, snugly located in the gallery of the palm decked hall, the detective watched and waited, enjoying the brilliant scene about him and almost forgetting the object of his unusual dissipation. Of a sudden there was a hush. A woman was entering the room, and leaning forward like the rest he caught full sight of the object of so much attention as she passed under the palms surrounded by a court of students. From head to foot she glistened with diamonds and jewels of all sorts.

"Who is that young woman?" he asked a man near him.

"That is Marie Newcastle."

"And who is Marie Newcastle?"

"Oh," laughed the man, "you must be a stranger here. Miss Newcastle is a young actress whose parents live here, where she spends her vacations. From a simple village girl she has grown to be the queen of the college boys and the leader among the livelier set of the town. She is frowned upon and petted, but that she is enjoying her youthful reign you will acknowledge when you see her drive down Hillsboro avenue tomorrow afternoon behind her white ponies with a college boy at her side dividing honors with a snow white bulldog. Oh, Marie Newcastle is a college queen."

With misgivings next morning Mr. Martinot betook himself to the lively though simply appointed cottage of Miss Newcastle's parents. "She has the jewels. That is enough for me," he said as he waited interminably for that young lady to appear after her dissipation of the night before.

When Miss Newcastle did appear, it was with a hastily donned gown twisted about her in aesthetic fashion, simulating the coils of a serpent. Its delicate green beautifully set off her blond complexion, but the ornament at the neck caught Mr. Martinot's instant attention. This was a frog of the most brilliant emeralds, with a diamond stripe running down its back, while its legs of gold filigree terminated in two enormous pearls. Something in Mr. Martinot's face frightened Miss Newcastle, for she stepped to the portieres and closed them.

"I am sorry," said he, "to be abrupt with you, but I must ask you for those jewels—that frog and the others. They are stolen property, as you know, but if you give them up at once perhaps"—

Miss Newcastle smiled, showing a set of very pretty white teeth. "You are mistaken," she said, "for they are not stolen, and if you will allow me to write a note and send it away by a messenger I shall soon receive an answer that will convince you."

Miss Newcastle seated herself at a dainty desk and dashed off a note upon the same paper and in the same hand which Mr. Martinot remembered.

"Now," she said, "I will wait up stairs until the answer comes, but you may keep this if you like," tossing the frog into his hands.

No sooner had the portieres closed than Mr. Martinot stepped to the desk, and picking up the blotter held it in front of the overhanging mirror. The words were blurred, but discernible: "Come. Trouble. Jewels you gave me." The address was plain.

Rushing out, Mr. Martinot hailed a cab. "Drive to 998 Chapel street," he ordered "and $5 if you beat a messenger with five minutes the start."

As the cab drew up to the door a young man disappeared inside. "That is the man I want—the young man who hides when he sees a stranger."

Up stairs in his room, where the detective ran two steps at a time to catch him, crouched the young man, deadly pale and trembling from head to foot. "I will confess all—all," he gasped as the frog was flashed before his eyes, telling him that his game was up, "all—all, if only you will not let—let him know.

"I was in debt, horribly in debt. I owed for everything and could not get a cent at home, though God knows I tried hard. And then when I was being posted at my clubs I thought suddenly of—of father's jewels, that he has collected for a lifetime, and one of which would mean so much for me. I intended to slip into the upper apartment and take only one, but I could not find the casket. I had been drinking to nerve myself, and I turned on the keys one after another, trying to light the gas.

"Then I went down stairs to look in father's rooms, and I awakened him getting the casket out."

"And the fire?"

The boy's face grew so ashen that Mr. Martinot stopped him, thinking he would faint.

"O God! O God!" he moaned. "How can I hope to be forgiven! The sound of that awful explosion rings in my ears night and day. I have hated those awful jewels. I gave Marie most of them. She sent some to a friend to sell for her. There were so many. But I could not touch one. They were blood covered."

The young man's sobs shook the table upon which he had buried his head.

"The little flame of gas must have exploded near those open torches, father's great antique lights. And the people who died! O my God! I heard them shriek!"

There was a gasping, gurgling sound. Harry Williams was choking, but as he was lifted to the window a queer, weird laugh broke from his lips, and his eyes shone like a madman's.

"Red as hell!" he shouted. "Beautiful!"

The case was never brought to trial, for Harry Williams did not regain his reason, and today his father is a broken hearted old man in spite of the recovery of nearly all the precious gems.—Augusta Prescott in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HE WOULD LIE DOWN.

THE DEACON'S EIGHT YEARS' STRUGGLE WITH OLD BILLY.

For a Time the Strange Performance Interested All Storkville Centre; Then Only Strangers Paid Attention to It—A Flood Ended the Contest.

"Deacon Penguin," said Colonel Calliper, "had a farm on the outskirts of Storkville Centre, Vt. He raised considerable truck, and he was at the Centre most every day. In fact, he and his horse and wagon were about as familiar as any objects in Main street, and in 1852 something happened that drew attention to them more than ever.

"In that year the deacon bought a new horse—a big, gaunt, gray horse, which he called Billy. The gray wasn't a handsome horse, but he was good and strong, and the deacon got him pretty cheap, so he was satisfied. But the second day he drove him into the village something disagreeable happened. When the deacon came out of a store where he had been leaving some vegetables, he found Billy lying down. That was unpleasant. It isn't nice to have a horse that lies down when you are driving him. Deacon Penguin got him up after a good deal of trouble and drove him home. The next day the horse lay down again, and the next, and then it was discovered that he had a habit of lying down, which the horse dealer of whom Deacon Penguin had bought him had forgotten to mention when he sold him to Deacon Penguin.

"The next day when the deacon drove along Main street the people saw around the body of the big gray horse a broad canvas belt, and when the deacon drew up by the curbstone at the store where he generally stopped first they saw sticking up from the top of this belt alongside the saddle of the harness a stout iron ring. Sticking out of the rear of the deacon's wagon were three or four timbers, and what these things were for was very soon seen. The deacon hadn't much more than got into the store before the horse lay down, as usual.

"When the deacon came out, he went around to the rear of the wagon and pulled out the timbers. He set them up over the horse. They made a sort of gallows frame—two uprights with a crossbeam between. Right in the middle of the crossbeam on the under side there was a stout iron eye. The deacon went back to the wagon after he had set up this derrick and reached under the seat and pulled out a tackle, one block of which he hooked to the eye set in the crossbeam, while the other block he hooked into the ring in the belt. Then he carried the free end of the rope from the upper block along to a block attached to one of the uprights and then down to and around a drum, to which was attached a handle.

"By the time the deacon had got this derrick rigged it seemed as though all Storkville Centre and the surrounding population were standing on the sidewalk and in the street watching him, and when he set taut on the tackle and the frame began to creak with the horse's weight the interest was something tremendous. Slowly but surely he raised the big gray horse until he had him on his feet again. When Billy's feet touched the ground, he gave up. The deacon unhooked the tackle and carried it back and put it under the seat again, and then he took down the derrick and stowed it in the wagon.

"But the next day the same performance was all gone through with again. It would seem as though Billy ought to have known better. Of course he knew that the deacon was bound to get him every time, but he was mulish about that one habit. He wouldn't give it up. And some people said the deacon was mulish too. He was certainly a very persistent, patient man. He kept the derrick in his wagon always; never unloaded it. He was ready for Billy any time, and whenever he came to town Billy was sure to lie down and the deacon to raise him.

"For a week or ten days the deacon's derrick was the most interesting thing in Main street. A crowd gathered every day to see him lift Billy up, and I suppose that, all things considered, the lifting of Billy, which was continued in that way for eight years, was really the most astonishing thing that ever happened in Storkville Centre. But after a week or two people scarcely paid any more attention to it. The deacon got to be very expert in getting the horse on his feet, and people—that is, Storkville people—paid no more attention to it than they would to a man rolling a barrel of flour into a wagon on a pair of skids. But it was always of interest to strangers. The stranger who happened to see Deacon Pengnin getting old Billy on his feet again was pretty sure to think and to say that it was the most curious thing he'd ever seen.

"Well, this went along until the fall of 1860, which was the year they had the great flood in Storkville Centre. There was a little brook running through Deacon Penguin's farm right back of the barn in which old Billy was stabled. Nobody ever dreamed of this little stream ever being anything more than a brook in any kind of weather, but in the great flood it rose to a torrent, and it carried away the old barn and old Billy down into the larger stream that runs through Storkville Centre. The big gray was never heard of in Storkville Centre again, and so nobody could tell how the struggle between him and the deacon might finally have ended."—New York Sun.

Swallows in All Seasons.

It is stated that swallows have been in England during every month of the year. As partial confirmation of this assertion a correspondent writes to a London publication that he saw two at Whitely on the evening of Nov. 2.

A NAILLESS HORSESHOE.

Which Seems to Be Admirably Adapted to Its Purpose.

In one respect the human race has made very little improvement during the past few thousand years. This is in the matter of horseshoes. Our present method of shoeing horses has not changed materially for centuries, and has always been rude and irrational. One of the chief objections to the system is that the hoof is made to fit the shoe instead of the shoe to fit the hoof. This involves a lot of cutting and scraping, and is the chief cause of lameness and stumbling. The use of nails is also a serious objection, as, no matter how careful the blacksmith may be, there are cases when a tender spot will be penetrated. It is quite obvious that nature never intended nails to be driven into a horse's hoof.

THE SHOE AS FITTED.

The accompanying illustrations show a novel horseshoe that has been subjected to a careful and thorough trial on half a dozen horses. Like a great many works of genius, the one in question is extremely simple. It consists of a band of metal about an inch high, which fits around the lower edge of the hoof. At the base of this band there is a sort of projecting shelf, or flange, which is made to fit into a groove running around the inside of the shoe. The latter is made of steel, of the usual shape and style. The only differences between it and the ordinary shoe are the presence of the grooves and the absence of nail holes.

When the band is fitted to the hoof (which is done very readily), the shoe in turn is attached by slipping the flange into the grove. It now remains to clasp the arrangement by two screws in the rear. These may be turned to any degree of tightness desired, and a moderate degree is sufficient to prevent the shoe from coming off. The whole arrangement may be put on or taken off in a moment.

THE SHOE PROPER.

Made Him Apologize.

That Christian IX. of Denmark, whose illness is at present causing much anxiety, brings up his children in the way they should go is sufficiently evidenced by the following anecdote: One day at the dinner-table the young Prince asked his father what was the meaning of a word he had never heard before. This word, "lusing," is the Danish equivalent for our "box on the ears." The king asked his son where he had heard such a word. The boy, blushing to the roots of his hair, confessed after a little natural hesitation that he had been out in the streets amusing himself by ringing the bells and then running away. But at one door an angry porter rushed out and shouted after him that he would give him a "lusing" if ever he did such a thing again. When the prince had finished his explanation, his father exclaimed, "Very well, to-morrow you shall go with me to that very house and beg the porter's pardon for such rudeness." Accordingly, the next day the king went with his much-abashed son and made him apologize.

Discouraging a Boy.

A boy 8 or 9 years old stood at the corner of Brush and Elizabeth streets the other day with head up and arms folded. He had three hen's feathers stuck in his cap. He had a bow slung to his back, and in a quiver made of buffalo hide he had three or four arrows. In his belt was the family breadknife, and in his right hand was a war-club. As he thus stood, casting his eagle eye about him, a telegraph boy came along and stopped and looked him over. The inspection lasted a full minute and then he asked:

"Playing Injun?"

"Yes."

"Got a name?"

"Red Cloud."

"Humph! No go."

"What's the matter?"

"You have been eating bread and butter with sugar on it, and forgot to wipe off your mouth! Better stay in the back yard and scare the baby! You're no big Injun!"—Detroit Free Press.

An Expensive Violin.

It is reported that the Stradivarius violin known under the name of Hercules, has just passed into the possession of M. Eugene Ysaye, the well-known Belgian violinist, who purchased it of Paul Nothomb, king's advocate, of Manche in Belgium, for $2,500. The instrument, dated 1732, and one of the most perfect ever turned out by the celebrated Cremona master, is said to be in a beautiful state of preservation.

Unusual Colors of Animals.

The coloring of animals seen in Maine this season is something unusual. There have been white moose, milk white fawns, gray wolves, and there has recently been captured a pale yellow fox.

There is nothing a married woman enjoys more than assisting a girl to land a young man.

HOODWINK UNCLESAM

MANY ARTICLES ON WHICH NO DUTY IS PAID.

Some Dear Friend on This Side Wishes a Dress Pattern or Some Jewelry—A Careful Examination of All Articles Is an Impossibility.

Mania of Returning Tourists.

Most travelers, on returning from Europe, have a mania for and have very few conscientious scruples against, evading the payment of customs duties. They bought some articles on the other side, not to sell, but to give away. When they started away they were commissioned by various acquaintances to make purchases—a dozen pairs of gloves for one, a diamond pin for another, a collection of pipes for a third, some small works of art for a fourth and so on. Under the strict interpretation of the law these articles are dutiable and should be "declared" to the customs officers of New York as soon as they come aboard down the bay. But the policy of the travelers appear to be, "Declare nothing unless it is separately packed and too bulky to escape attention."

DISEMBARKING FROM THE STEAMER.

Perhaps the total value of the dutiable articles is $100. The traveler puts the small articles in his pockets, distributes the others through his trunk and valise and is reasonably confident that they will not make a sufficient showing to interest the inspector or excite his suspicion. Is he a smuggler? If so, then a majority of Americans returning from Europe are smugglers.

No one knows better than the inspectors, however, that these small articles are being brought in. The inspectors overlook their presence and seldom make any trouble unless the article is so large or so valuable that to pass it would be a gross neglect of duty. If a man has five trunks filled with clothing there may be a question as to whether all the garments are his and have already been worn. A traveler with one or two ordinary steamer trunks is not an object of suspicion.

It is not to be inferred from this that travelers are subject to no restrictions, or that an American may bring in a cartload of foreign goods with impunity. It is true, however, that the inspection of baggage during the tremendous rush following the arrival of an ocean liner is not the ordeal that many persons imagine, and that inspectors are not ordinarily inclined to be suspicious and proceed on the theory that every returning American is attempting to cheat his own country. If they unloaded every trunk and valise and cross-examined passengers as to every article that might technically be called dutiable it would require a month to "clear" all the baggage swung from the hold of a mammoth steamer. The passenger who unlocks his trunk, removes the tray and gives satisfactory answers to a few questions is not liable to have trouble. Lifting one or two of the garments and patting to see if anything bulky is hidden underneath usually constitutes the "inspection."

WAITING THEIR TURN.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Which city is it that has the name of the city of homes?" asked the boarder who is always forgetting.

"It is a little doubtful just now," chipped in the cheerful idiot, "whether the title of 'city of Holmes' belongs to Philadelphia or Chicago."—Indianapolis Journal.

Cynicism.

The poor drunkard lay in the gutter while the thoughtless crowd jeered.

Along came the good hearted citizen and placed the unfortunate in a standing position.

"Ah," said the crowd. "He has been there himself." So shines a good deed in a naughty world.—Indianapolis Journal.

HER FIRST REHEARSAL.

Mary Anderson de Navarro Tells of Her Stage Debut.

In writing of her first appearance on the stage Mary Anderson de Navarro tells in the Ladies' Home Journal that the opportunity to play was presented her by Manager McCauley at his Louisville Theater. The star who was playing at the theater had failed to attract paying houses, and Dr. Griffin, who was Mrs. de Navarro's stepfather and her business manager, suggested to Mr. McCauley that she be given a chance to play. The offer was gladly accepted, and Mrs. de Navarro writes that there was only one rehearsal, and it was called for the next morning.

"On my way to the Cathedral," she adds, "I was enchanted to see posters on the fences making the announcement.'" The main part of the poster was devoted to advertising Milnes Levick in "The Spy," and at the bottom in smaller type the show bill read:

"Saturday evening, November 27, 1875—MISS MARY ANDERSON, a young lady of this city, will make her first apearance on any stage as Juliet, in Shakspeare's 'Romeo and Juliet;' Milnes Levick as Mercutio, and a powerful cast of characters."

"As I was in the quiet church the hour for rehearsal struck, and I started for the theater in a radiant frame of mind. Passing with my people through the darkened house and private boxes covered with their linen dusters, I found myself for the first time upon the stage. How strange and dreamlike it semed, that empty theater, lighted only here and there by the faint glimmer of the gray day without, bereft of all the eager faces it had always been peopled with! And the stage! How dismal it was with the noisy patter of the rain on its tin roof, a small gas jet burning in the center, throwing a dingy light on the men and women (they did not relish the extra rehearsal), gloomily standing in the wings. On seeing me, all looked surprised. Some made remarks in whispers, which I felt to be unkind; others laughed audibly. Scarcely 16, my hair in a long braid, my frock reaching to my boot-tops, tall, shy and awkward, I may have given them cause for merriment; but it was as cruel, I thought, as under-bred, to make no effort to conceal their mirth at my expense. However, their rudeness was salutary in its effect, putting me on my mettle before the work began."

His Ground Stated.

As I sat on the hotel veranda in a Georgia town, I noticed a colored friend and brother working my way. When he finally stood before me, hat in hand and bowing in much earnestness, I asked:

"Well, George, did a cyclone strike your meeting house?"

"N-o, not zactly, sah."

"Want to raise money for the preacher?"

"Ha'dly, sar, ha'dly."

"After a bell for the steeple?"

"N-o, sah—can't say as we am."

"Then you want Sunday school books?"

"No, sah."

"But you came here to strike me for a quarter. I can see it in your looks."

"Well, yes, sah."

"And don't you intend to ask for it on church grounds?"

"No, sah, I has other grounds, sah. I has a particularly ground of my own, sah."

"Well, what is it?"

"Why, sah, I was going to ask for it on de ground that you didn't know I jess got outer jail for stealin' a bag of cotton!"

He got it.—Detroit Free Press.

A Spry Young Woman.

Some of the young women are seeking fame by the same methods that have proved so efficacious in the case of elderly ladies. North Clinton, Maine, has a young widow who milks three cows, does the work for two in the family, drives three miles and does a day's work, returning home at night in time to milk, mend the socks, feed the pigs, split the wood, etc. Then Canaan has a smart young woman, who, besides doing the housework for quite a large family this fall, did the milking and took all the care of two cows, the hogs, chickens, horses, etc., picked fourteen bushels of apples, put them in the cellar, pulled two stacks of beans, and hauled in three large loads of pumpkins, and after digging and picking up fifteen bushels of potatoes, pulling thirty bushels of beets and turnips, and twenty-five heads of cabbage, put them all in the cellar herself.

A Woman's Benefactions by Will.

The will of Mrs. Mary B. Turner, late of Randolph, widow of Royal W. Turner, filed in the Norfolk registry at Dedham, contains the following public bequests: Home For Aged Couples, Boston, $3,000; Seamen's Friend society, Boston, $3,000; Home For Little Wanderers, Boston, $3,000; Kindergarten For the Blind, Boston, $5,000; Central Cemetery association, Randolph, $1,000; parsonage fund of the first parish, Randolph, $3,000; Home For Aged Men, Boston, $2,000; Home For Aged Women, Boston, $2,000; New England Hospital For Women and Children, Boston, $5,000; Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear infirmary, Boston, $2,000; Massachusetts General hospital, Boston, to be used in providing free beds, $5,000; the Bethesda society, 32 Rutland street, Boston, $2,000. All the residue of her estate, after paying the above and certain private bequests, goes in equal shares to the Massachusetts hospital, Home For Aged Couples, Home For Aged Men, Home For Aged Women and Kindergarten For the Blind.—Boston Transcript.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

RV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 28..... 1896

During the last two months, says the San Francisco Argonaut, the Treasury officials have shipped from San Francisco to New York twenty millions of dollars in gold. About two years ago another shipment of twenty millions was made. It may not make much difference to California whether the gold is lying in the Sub-Treasury on Commercial street, San Francisco, or in the Sub-Treasury on Wall street, New York. But it gives an idea of how rich a stream of treasure California pours into the lap of the United States. This State digs out of her rock ribbed mountains about twelve millions annually, nearly all of which is minted here. If California were suddenly to disappear beneath the Pacific ocean as a result of some great cataclysm of nature, she would be missed more than any of her sister States.

The export of horses from this country to Europe has increased largely in the last two or three years. During the first eight months of last year 22,755 horses: valued at $2,947,000, were shipped to British ports, as against 15,614 in the same period of 1894, and 10,177 in 1893. The shipments to continental ports show a large increase too. The varieties of horses in demand are different in almost every country in Europe, varying of course, with the kind of work they are needed for, although in many cases very different styles of horses are demanded in different countries for pretisely similar work. Despite the astonishing fall in the value of range horses in the west, horse breeders in the south and east think the future is very promising.

There is a growing demand in this country for the recognition of the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents. It is now admitted that they have greatly improved their position since New Year's day, and have hemed the Spaniards into the seaports and their neighborhood. They have a regular organized government, and an army fairly well drilled and armed. They hold positions in the interior, which an army of twice their strength cannot carry, and their raids into the coast districts have put an end to sugar-making on every plantation, except one which lies close to Havana. In a word, they have given the world such reason to expect toeir final success, as justifies them as entitled to all the rights secured by the international laws of war.

The arrival of Mrs. Ishala, the Japanese commissioner to the Columbian exposition, reveals a singuiar state of things in the Orient. It seems that all Japan is deeply imbued with the feeling that Russia intends in the near future, to wipe out the Japanese Empire and absorbe it into the Russian. The Japanese are rushing the improvement and building of fortifications at all strategic points. They are adding a large number of ships to their navy, half of which will be built in this country. They believe Russia will stop at nothing she can do to rech the open Southern sea. If England closes the road to Constantinople, Russia will open it to the Pacific.

The Sacramento Bee says: Three masked robbers obtained $3,6000 from Market Street Bank in San Francisco on Tuesday. How very foolish they were They will probably be caught and will then certainly go to San Quintin. They should have started a bank of their own, elected themselves President and Directors, glutted the whole institution after it grew to be prosperous, and have themselves looked upon in commercial circles as shrewd financiers.

In a recent article W. H. Mills said: "Los Angeles arose from a city of 5000 to a city of nearly 100,000 in less than twenty years, simply by reason of the capacity of her citizans to act together in the upbuilding the country. The same statment is true of every city and every commonwealth that has enjoyed any degree of prosperity within the past century. It is through the united effort alone that prosperity can come to California.

A western genius has applied for a patent on a corn planter, which consists of two boxes attached to the forelegs of a horse just above the fetlocks, in which was the corn to be planted. Cords passed over pullies attached to the saddle, down to the hind legs, so that every time the horse stepped the tightening of the cords would open the boxes on the forelegs and some corn be shaken into the holes made by the front feet.

Over twelve thousand tons of sugar are now on the way to America from Alexandria, Egypt, due here about March 1st. The importation of Egyptian sugar in large quantities is a new thing, made necessary through the apprehension that the Cuban crops, by reason of the war, will be poor. Considerable sugar is also being shipped from Hamburg and Honolulu.

Harvard is to reduce the college course from four to three years. This announcement will undoubtedly be received with pleasure by those sons of rich men who attend the institution for form's sake only, and not for the acquisition of knowledge.

At the rate the unfortunate Armenians are being slaughtered by the Turks, it begins to look as though there would not be many lest to save, by the time some power intervenes to stop the brutal work.

The only bank in Alaska has failed Itowed its depositors $15,000.

EUGENE FIELD INTERVIEWED.

That Is, He Fired Talk For Nine Minutes at a Reporter.

Eugene Field, the humorous poet, famous for his beautiful children's verse, I was told, had just come in from Chicago and would be at the Authors' club that night. I reached the Authors' club about 10 o'clock and learned that Field had gone.

"Where?"

"To Washington."

"What train?"

"Eleven o'clock."

I was in Jersey City and in that train at 10:50.

"Whip out your notebook and write for all you're worth," said Mr. Field, throwing himself and his bag in the seat. "You've only nine minutes. Time enough, though, for two uneventful biographies like mine."

"Never mind that. You're fond of the quaint and curious, Mr. Field. What'r' your fads, pets and so on?"

"Well, listen for your life now. I'm fond of dogs, birds and all small pets. My favorite flower is the carnation. My favorites in fiction are Hawthorne's 'Scarlet Letter,' 'Don Quixote' and 'Pilgrim's Progress.' I believe in ghosts, in witches and in fairies. I should like to own a big astronomical telescope and a 24 tune music box. I adore dolls. I dislike 'politics,' so called. I should like to have the privilege of voting extended to women. I am unalterably opposed to capital punishment. I favor a system of pensions for noble services in literature, art, science, etc. I approve of compulsory education. I believe in churches and schools. I hate wars, armies, soldiers, guns and fireworks. I do not care particularly for sculpture or for painting. I try not to become interested in them, for the reason that if I were to cultivate a taste for them I should presently become hopelessly bankrupt. I dislike all exercises, and I play games very indifferently. I love to read in bed. I am extravagantly fond of perfumes. My favorite color is red. I am a poor diner, and I drink no wines or spirits of any kind, nor do I smoke tobacco. I dislike crowds, and I abominate functions. I am 6 feet in height and have shocking taste in dress, but I like to have well dressed people about me. I do not love all children. I have tried to analyze my feelings toward children, and I think I discover that I love them in so far as I can make pets of them. I believe that, if I live, I shall do my best literary work when I am a grandfather."

"And how did you become a humorist, Mr. Field?" I asked, while the porter besought me with tears in his eyes to leave the train before it started.

"Oh, they're not made. They're born."

"All aboard!" And Eugene Field was gone.—Demorest's Magazine.

Missouri 40,000 Years Hence.

According to the engineers of the hydrographic bureau, the level of the gulf of Mexico is one foot higher than it was in 1859, and, of course, the encroachment on the surrounding coasts has been greater or less, pending on their character. In some places, where the marginal lands are composed of high, rocky bluffs, this change of level has gone on from year to year without attracting attention. On the other hand, many low lying points (some that were once inhabited by the primitive inhabitants or by the pioneer white settlers), are entirely submerged. The cause of this change of level has not as yet been ascertained, but it is reasonably certain that it is the result of either a settling of the dry land or of a general and uniform rising or upheaval in the gulf bed. No man who has given the matter a moment's thought will argue that there is more water in the gulf now than there was 35 years ago. On the contrary, there isn't the least doubt but that there is much less. However this may be, if this aqueous encroachment is steadily maintained, Keokuk will be a deep water harbor and St. Louis and the whole of Missouri will be entirely submerged in less than 40,000 years from Jan. 1, 1895.—St. Louis Republic.

On Reading.

To sit down in a chair without an object is to jump into a thicket of temptations. A vacant hour is always the devil's hour. When time hangs heavy, the wings of the spirit flap heavily and slow. Then it is that a book is a strong tower, nay, a very church, with angels lurking among the leaves as if they were so many niches. Reading helps to make conversation harmless, by making it less petty and censorious, by furnishing us with other topics than our neighbors' faults and foibles. It is very hard for a person who does not like reading to talk much in company without sinning. Furthermore, a taste for reading often hinders our taking the wrong side in practical questions which are mooted in the world, but bear upon the church. It does this either by the information it has enabled us to obtain on the subject itself, or by making our instincts accurate and sensitive through our familiarity with right principles.—Faber.

Both Wicked.

"My husband," said the large, fleshy lady, "has a habit of marking paragraphs in the paper that say mean things about women."

"So you will not fail to see them, eh? Still that is not as mean a trick as mine plays. He cuts them all out. Then I have to get another paper only to find that I have been fooled again."—Indianapolis Journal.

Latest In Biscuit.

Mistress—You broke my Sevres plate. You are discharged. How did you break it?

Servant—I carelessly dropped one of the biscuits you made yesterday on it.—Woonsocket (R. I.) Reporter.

Grains of wheat have been found in the sun dried bricks of Egypt and Nineveh, dating from at least B. C. 3300.

Espiritu Santo, the name of a Texas bay, means Holy Spirit.

Rubinstein's Charity.

Rubinstein had probably traveled more than other any virtuoso. In his time he made many fortunes and gave them away to the poor in Russia. During the famine which raged among the Russian peasants a few years ago he journeyed to Vienna, Moscow and St. Petersburg to play for charity. The price of seats rose to unheard of figures, but every penny of the money went to the starving farmers. It is said that in the course of 28 years the sum which he thus disposed of amounted to $250,000.

THE OLD ORGANIST.

In through the window steals the silent splendor
Of fading twilight. Like a blessing there
It lingers with a touch so soft and tender
Upon an old man's flowing silver hair.
The pews are vacant, but for shadows flitting
With silent tread along the narrow aisle,
And like dim spirit forms within them sitting,
Or bowing in devotion there the while.

Beside the organ sits the old man, playing
A tune so sad that sorrow seems the theme.
His fingers o'er the yellow keys are straying,
As though he played it all within a dream.
His tear dim eyes see not with mortal vision,
The music bears his spirit far away
Into a splendor land of life elysian,
Where peace and pleasure crown an endless day.

—New York Ledger.

CONDOR A DISAPPOINTMENT.

Visitors Expect to See a Bird That Rivals In Size the Fabled Roc.

If the visitor to the zoological gardens will make his way to the vultures' aviary, he will find a condor of the Andes.

When he sees the great somber plumaged bird sitting on the tree stump in the middle of a not too roomy cage, his first feeling will probably be one of disappointment. Some of this disappointment must be put down to the highly exaggerated accounts of early writers. The measurement of 18 feet has been given as the wing spread of a bird actually killed and taped. Darwin shot one in 1834 with a wing spread of 8 feet 6 inches, and it measured 4 feet from beak to tail. The measurements of one that fell to Humboldt's gun tally pretty closely with those of the bird that Darwin killed.

Part of the disappointment is no doubt due to the surroundings. One has formed vivid mental pictures of the bird sailing at a great height without an effort, soaring in graceful circles, or gliding down like lightning upon its prey.

One sees it sitting with its head drawn down between its wings, and its plumage draggled, without sufficient space over which to run to gather momentum for a rise, or height enough to fly if it could leave the ground. Sometimes, from the top of its perch, it attempts to use its wings, but its efforts result in failure.

It was long supposed that condors hunted by scent, but experiments have proved that the sense of smell in these birds is by no means keen. They probably discover their food by sight, and the descent of one bird serves as a signal to others at a distance.

A young condor is a much prettier object than an old one. It is clothed entirely in white down, and when it settles itself to sleep, with its feet hidden and its head tucked away, it looks like a fluffy white ball.

The plumage of the adult is black, with a white ruff round the neck, and the quills have a white edging, which becomes broader at each successive molt.—London Sketch.

METAL MARKET.

Following are the latest prices quoted in the San Francisco metal market:

|---|---|
| Refined silver, per oz | $ 67⅝ |
| Antimony | 10 |
| Borax, refined, in car lots | 5⅛ |
| Pig lead | 3.90 |

Miss Clara Eldred returned to Big Pine last Tuesday.

A special train went down the road Saturday night, returning Monday.

J. A. McKenzie of Darwin was in town last Saturday night, returning Sunday.

"Bill" Nye, the humorist, died at his home in North Carolina last Saturday.

James McCarty came down from Fish Springs last Tuesday for mining supplies.

Pat Clinton came in from Cerro Gordo on Tuesday, remaining in town a day or two.

June Smith passed through town yesterday with a big team on his way to Mojave.

Thos. Boland came up from Keeler last Saturday and returned the next morning.

John E. Meroney went to Bishop last Tuesday morning, for a week's visit with relatives.

S. G. Sneden Esq. arrived from Bishop on Monday's train and remained until yesterday morning.

J. W. Robinson of Carson has been spending several days in this vicinity looking after his land interests.

Wm. McDonald, accompanied by a nephew, came down from Bishop Wednesday, returning yesterday.

Miss Lena Thompson returned last Monday evening from a visit to her sister, Mrs. Jones, at Round Valley.

Mrs. D. Samuels returned to San Francisco last Tuesday morning after a couple of week's visit with relatives here.

It is reported that at the next session of the Superior Court, which will probably be next April, the Goodale and Hines water suit will be tried.

Don't send your money away. Bring in your lowest quotations in any line and we will duplicate them, quality being equal. Rhine's the leaders. *

The old Eclipse mill over on the river has been torn down and John McSweeny and Neil McLean have hauled the lumber over to town for A. W. Eibeshutz.

Washington's Birthday was quiet here quite a number of people went to Big Pine. All official business was suspended, and a number of flags floated during the day.

Don't be humbugged by catalogues and circulars. We defy competition and will not be undersold by any one, and our stock is the most complete. Rhine's the leading merchants. *

H. J. Robinson arrived home from Los Angeles the first of the week and will soon return there with his family. He sold his ranch at George's Creek to Los Angeles parties.

Fitzsimmons and Maher, the pugalists, met last Friday on Mexican soil, Fitzsimmons was awarded the fight after one round, and the whole thing ended more or less in disgust all around.

Eight truckloads of dynamite exploded in a small town near Johannesburg, South Africa, last week, killing over a hundred people and wounding 250 more. Nearly the whole town was wiped out.

The celebration at Big Pine on the 22d was very successful. A large crowd was in attandance and all enjoyed themselves. There were quite a number of hotly contested races, causing plenty of excitement.

We have just received a beautiful line of Highland novelties, Brocade Henriettas, Lyons silks, silverettes, ganffre and elorter etc. in endless variety. We will be pleased to show them to you. Rhine's the leading merchants. *

Dave Holland came up from Keeler last Tuesday and returned next day. A grand St. Patrick's day celebration will be given at Keeler, including races and other sports, and a ball in the evening. A complete programme will be published next week.

There has been quite a squabble in town about telegrams and as a result the Western Union company have discontinued their office here and all messages must be sent to Citrus and forwarded from there. Mr. Wilkinson says that it may result in the removal of the Weather Station, as he is of course unable to send in his reports. The matter may yet be satisfactorily adjusted.

This Week's Attractions At The Lakeside.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—J. Blaney and family have moved to Cerro Gordo, where he has secured work in the mines.

J. Dunphy shipped a car load of lead ore from his mine last Tuesday. His nephew, Harry Dunphy is running the mine during the absence of his uncle, who is under the doctors care at St Mary's hospital in San Francisco.

The leasers of the San Lucas Mine in Cerro Gordo have given up their lease as they could not make it pay on account of the pay streak being too small.

D. Holland and P. Clinton went to Independence from Keeler on Tuesday morning's train. Returning Wednesday evening.

T. Boland shipped a car load of second class ore on Thursday's train.

Mrs. A. L. Boland and Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle went to Lone Pine Sunday, returning on Monday.

Dr. McQueen, the dentist is at Lone Pine and may remain for a week or so.

Frank Fitzgerald and wife and R. Slacke and J. Curran went to Modock by private conveyance Wednesday morning. J. A. McKenzie left for his mine on Tuesday morning. R. Kennedy and J. Stoffel are the latest additions to the forty-niner's camp on Nob Hill.

We heard two old codgers discussing the minister Brown trial as it appears in the Chronicle. "Wot do ye tink of Pastor Brown?" asked one old codger. "Oh I don't know," said the other, "but he seems to hev ben minglin' with his flock to sum extent. I jest read Mrs. Stockton's testimony. Say she's a bird, ain't she?" "Wot kind of a bird?" inquired the first speaker. "Wal, I ain't much up on hornithology," was the answer, "but she's either a Brown-thrush or Lyre-bird."

Harry Lynde made his first trip as mail clerk on the Keeler division on Monday's train. He says the other side of the mountains is all right, but the Carson & Colorado route suits him well enough.

A special train went over the road to Keeler last Saturday containing Mr. H. M. Yerington and wife. Mr. E. Williams and wife and also Mr. R. J. Laws and J. A. Yerington. They remained over Sunday and went north again on Monday as far as Alvord and Bishop stations and to Hawthorne Tuesday.

A stock train consisting of eight cars of stock was shipped from Bishop Tuesday. Six more carloads were shipped Thursday for San Francisco by Summers and other parties.

More anon.

CARTHODE RAYS.

Clippings From Blackrock

A valuable horse belonging to A. L. Conklin sustained a broken leg one day last week, which necessitated the killing of the animal.

W. A. Moore, who has been away to the Southern part of the state since November, returned home on Wednesday of last week.

R. Borigan of Lone Pine arrived with his train of pack mules on Saturday, and is now engaged in packing out wood for J. W. Calloway.

Supt. R. J. Laws together with Senator Evan Williams and wife took private conveyance from Tibbetts to Big Pine on Monday, going up on the west side of the river. The special train which they left at the former station awating them at the latter.

Surveyor J. Seely has been engaged during the past week in our neighborhood locating government corners and running section lines. His investigations causes the Blackrock country to scratch their heads, and in the language of the ex-Congressman of Mississippi, to enquire, "where am I at?"

NONPARIEL.

At The Hirsh Mine

Work goes steadily forward, about twenty men are employed, a night and day shift works at the mine as well as the mill. Three hundred buckets of ore are handled every day, the buckets of the tramway holding about forty-five pounds each. A store in Independence and Lone Pine each have been running a delivery wagon for some time past. A hundred feet above the mine quite a large bunch of honey was uncovered by a blast, it proved to be an excellent article and is used on the table at the boarding house. Parts of it has become dark colored and sugared from the length of time it has been there. Three large buckets full of bees were caught when the honey was discovered.

Killing At Bodie.

George Cole was shot and killed by George Turley at Bodie last Saturday. For some trivial cause Turley went to the room of Cole, and after calling him to the door, emptied the contents of a double-barrelled shot gun into his head, tearing the entire top of his head to pieces. Cole lived a few hours after being shot. No cause for the shooting was given.

Civil Service Examination.

The following information is given: Examinations in the Railway Mail, Indian and Government Printing Service will be held at Reno, Nevada, April 22, 1896. No person will be admitted who has not previously filed an application with the Board of Civil Service Commissioners at Washington, D. C., and obtained an admission card.

At San Francisco the First National Bank of D. O. Mils & Co. is sueing to foreclose on $150,000 of the bonds of the Carson & Colorado Railroad Co., pledged as security by Thomas Bell for two promissory notes one for $15,000 aud the other for $50,000. ### They Wander Back Again.

M Laprairie arrived at Independence a few days ago after an absence of about three years during which time he has been around the world. He spent a considerable portion of the time at Johannesburg, South Africa, and brought with him a number of photographs from there. He says it is a poor place for a working man to go to as it is very hard to get a situation He went from there to Australia, returning across the Pacific to San Francisco. While on his trip he observed very closely the methods of prospecting in vogue in other countries, and from what he has seen he affirms that the mineral district here has never been half prospected. This district presents a better field for an intelligent prospector than anything he saw on his travels, and he will remain here. Inyo is a pretty good country to tie to.

Certificates Granted.

At the meeting of the Board of Education last week, grammar grade certificates were granted to the following persons: Mrs. M. E. Stevens of Bishop, Miss Clara Reynolds of Georges Creek, Miss Kate Arcularius of Round Valley, Miss Eva Gunter of Bishop, Miss Lea Darrah of Bishop, Miss L. Garrettson of Bishop, Miss M. M. Gregory, of Independence and Geo. W. Dixon, of Big Pine. No second grade certificates were granted

The present warm weather is liable to hurt the fruit crop to some extent this year. The warm days and nights we have been having are swelling the buds so they will blossom early enough to get caught by the late frost that usually comes like a thief in the night to rob the community of one of its means of income. For those hunting fine days and climate, this weather cannot be beat, but it is not good for the fruit crop, however.

It is reported that a stock train met with an accident up on the C. & C. a day or two ago. It appears that an Indian wanted to get aboard, and threw a switch to slack the speed of the train. A car or two were thrown from the track and three head of cattle killed.

B. H. Yandell Esq. and his mother, Mrs. M. A. Yandell, came down from Bishop last Monday, and will visit with relatives and friends here for a week or two. Ben is able to be around again, but has not fully recovered his strength.

Prof. Morris, the principal of the Inyo Academy will be down some time in April and deliver several lectures on Prophecy. A committee has been formed and a literary program will be rendered each evening.

H. Bellows of Olancha and his niece, Miss Mann of Iowa, came up from Olancha last Wednesday and visited in town for a couple of days.

R. S. Miner Esq. left here last evening by private conveyance for Bridgeport. He will return about the first of April.

A travelling show is billed here for one evening the first part of next month.

Religious Services.

The order of services on the Independencharge until further notice will be as follows: Independence—Service every Sunday evening to commence at 7 o'clock Services every fourth Sunday in the morning to commence at 11 o'clock. ### Pasevitch.

The Photographer, is coming to Independence, March 5th, and will remain only a short time. Any one appreciating good work will find Pasevitch is the only photographer in Inyo County producing first-class pictures. This is no paper talk, but it is proven by the enormous lot of work we turned out for the people in Bishop. Our motto is "good work or no pay." Price for cabinets, $3 per dozen. One extra large picture given away with every dozen cabinets. Look at our PLATINO WORK. Examine our large photograph at the Post Office.

A BIG SALT MINE.

The Development of a New California Industry.

Articles of incorporation have been filed by the "Crysal Rock Salt Mining Co." of San Francisco, with a capital stock of $500,000, of which $227,500 have been subscribed by Chas. G. Ahlborn, Sanford Bennett, Meyer Lewis, Julius Reimer, S. Lewis, L. Dorn and Ben Lewis.

The Crystal Rock Salt Mine is situated in San Bernardino County, and produces a salt of superior quality which, according to analysis made by Professor L. Falkenau, of the State Assay Office in San Francisco, is found to be chemicially pure. At the instance of Norton, Teller & Roden, and other San Francisco houses, a number of tests were made, with the result that the salt produced from this mine has been found to be equal to the best English salt in the market for butter making and table use, and for meat and fish packing, milling and dairy purposes. The lump stock salt from this mine is preferred by the large cattle companies to any other salt, by reason of its purity, dryness and solidity; also because it is the most economical for stock feeding. Owing to its firmness and purity it does not deliquesce when placed out on the ranges.

The Company controls over 1000 acres of mining ground in which the salt is mined from large deposits, as clear and transparent as crystals. The mine is connected with Salt Rock Station (Danby) on the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. by a road extending 32 miles, especially constructed by the Traction Engine Company, and upon which the company successfully operates a train of traction engine and wagons, constructed by the Best M'f'g Co. of San Leandro, Cal.

The company is about to commence the erection of extensive works at the mine, and upon their completion will be enabled to supply the purest salt ever produced for butter making, table use, meat and fish packing. Lump salt for stock feeding and milling purposes is now only being shipped.

The buildings at the mine are constructed of salt, and the company is about to erect an office building at the railroad station out of rock salt, which will attract great attention. Passengers on the train passing this station are now in the habit of getting off the train for the purpose of securing crystals of salt as keepsakes.

In the sunlight a building constructed of this salt appears as if it was covered with diamonds.

DISMANTLED WHITE CITY.

Fate of the Beautiful Statuary at the World's Fair.

The court of honor does not look so grand now as it did when it was surrounded with the white palaces or when illuminated at night with thousands of incandescent lamps or tinted with all the colors of the rainbow from the electric fountains. The buildings are gone. MacMonies' grand work of art is gone. All is gone save a lone Neptune and a shivering horse or two, and, rising majestically above the ruins, unharmed by the fire or winter, the statue of the republic. The monumental figure is in white now instead of gold, but with only the sky for a background it shows its proportions and lines to better effect now than before.

Other statues have not fared so well. Most of them were destroyed in the various fires which laid waste the entire central portion of the grounds, from the terminal station to the lake. If Columbus should come to Chicago and take a train out to Jackson Park in order to get away from his specter on the lake front he could stroll all around the court of honor, where in former days he was so populous, and only find one of himself. The only Columbus standing is the one in front of the machinery building, and inasmuch as this is headless, it is doubtful if the real Columbus would recognize it. If he did he would beg to be given a Christian burial or at least to be taken to the convent of La Rabida, in the bare rooms of which he might find a more congenial atmosphere.—Chicago Chronicle.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

By GILBERT PARKER.

[Copyright, 1893, by the J. B. Lippincott Co.]

Mackenzie flushed. She was a sensible woman. She knew that she had done wrong, and she said very promptly: "I am very sorry, miss. I was flustered, and I expect I haven't got used to speaking to—to Mrs. Armour as I'll be sure to do in the future."

As she spoke two or three deer came trotting out of the beeches down to the lakeside. If Lali was pleased and excited before, she was overwhelmed now. Her breath came in quick gasps. She laughed, she tossed her hands, she seemed to become dizzy with delight, and presently, as if this new link with and reminder of her past had moved her as one little expects a savage heart is moved, two tears gathered in her eyes, then slid down her cheeks unheeded and dried there in the sunlight as she still gazed at the deer. Marion, at first surprised, was now touched, as she could not have thought it possible concerning this wild creature, and her hand went out and caught Lali's gently. At this genuine act of sympathy, instinctively felt by Lali—the stranger in a strange land, husbanded and yet a widow—there came a flood of tears, and dropping on her knees she leaned against the low railing of the bridge and wept silently. So passionless was her grief it seemed the more pathetic, and Marion dropped on her knees beside her, put her arm round her shoulder and said: "Poor girl! Poor girl!"

At that Lali caught her hand and held it, repeating after her the words: "Poor girl! Poor girl!"

She did not quite understand them, but she remembered that once just before she parted from her husband at the great lakes he had said those very words. If the fates had apparently given things into Frank Armour's hands when he sacrificed this girl to his revenge, they were evidently inclined to play a game which would eventually defeat his purpose, wicked as it had been in effect if not in absolute motive. What the end of this attempt to engraft the Indian girl upon the strictest convention of English social life would have been had her introduction not been at Greyhope, where faint likenesses to her past surrounded her, it is hard to conjecture. But from present appearances it would seem that Richard Armour was not wholly a false prophet, for the savage had shown herself that morning to possess in their crudeness some striking qualities of character. Given character, many things are possible, even to those who are not of the elect.

This was the beginning of better things. Lali seemed to the Armours not quite so impossible now. Had she been of the very common order of Indian, "pure and simple," the task had resolved itself into making a common savage into a very common European. But whatever Lali was it was abundantly evident that she must be reckoned with at all points, and that she was more likely to become a very startling figure in the Armour household than a mere encumbrance to be blushed for, whose eternal absence were preferable to her company.

Years after that first morning Marion caught herself shuddering at the thought that came to her when she saw Lali hovering on the bridge. Whatever Marion's faults were, she had a fine dislike of anything that seemed unfair. She had not ridden to hounds for nothing. She had at heart the sportman's instinct. It was upon this basis indeed that Richard appealed to her in the first trying days of Lali's life among them.

To oppose your will to Marion on the basis of superior knowledge was only to turn her into a rebel, and a very effective rebel she made, for she had a pretty gift at the retort courteous, and she could take as much and as well as she gave. She rebelled at first at assisting in Lali's education, though by fits and starts she would teach her English words and help her to form long sentences and was on the whole quite patient. But Lali's real instructors were Mrs. Armour and Richard; her best, Richard.

The first few days she made but little progress, for everything was strange to her, and things made her giddy—the servants, the formal routine, the handsome furnishings, Marion's music, the great house, the many precise personal duties set for her to be got through at stated times and Mrs. Armour's rather grand manner. But there was the relief to this, else the girl had pined terribly for her native woods and prairies. This was the park, the deer, the lake, the hares and birds. While she sat saying over after Mrs. Armour words and phrases in English or was being shown how she must put on and wear the sashes which a dressmaker from Regent street had been brought to make, her eyes would wander dreamily to the trees, and the lake, and the grass. They soon discovered that she would pay no attention and was straightway difficult to teach if she was not placed where she could look out on the park. They had no choice, for though her resistance was never active it was nevertheless effective.

Presently she got on very swiftly with Richard, for he, with instinct worthy of a woman, turned their lessons upon her own country and Frank. This cost him something, but it had its reward. There was no more listlessness. Previously Frank's name had scarcely been spoken to her. Mrs. Armour would have hours of hesitation and impotent regret before she brought herself to speak of her son to his Indian wife. Marion tried to do it a few times and failed. The general did it with rather a forced voice and manner, because he saw that his wife was very tender upon the point. But Richard, who never knew self consciousness, spoke freely of Frank when he spoke at all, and it was seeing Lali's eyes brighten and her look earnestly fixed on him when he chanced to mention Frank's name that determined him on his new method of instruction. It had its dangers, but he had calculated them all. The girl must be educated at all costs. The sooner that occurred the sooner would she see her own position and try to adapt herself to her responsibilities and face the real state of her husband's attitude toward her.

He succeeded admirably. Striving to tell him about her past life and ready to talk endlessly about her husband, of his prowess in the hunt, of his strength and beauty, she also strove to find English words for the purpose, and Richard supplied them with uncommon willingness. He humored her so far as to learn many Indian words and phrases, but he was chary of his use of them and tried hard to make her appreciative of her new life and surroundings. He watched her waking slowing to an understanding of the life and of all that it involved. It gave him a kind of fear, too, because she was sensitive, and there was the possible danger of her growing disheartened or desperate and doing some mad thing in the hour that she wakened to the secret behind her marriage.

His apprehensions were not without cause, for slowly there came into Lali's mind the element of comparison. She became conscious of it one day when some neighboring people called at Greyhope. Mrs. Armour, in her sense of duty, which she had rigidly set before her, introduced Lali into the drawing room. The visitors veiled their curiosity and said some pleasant casual things to the young wife, but she saw the half curious, half furtive glances, she caught a sidelong glance and smile, and when they were gone she took to looking at herself in a mirror, a thing she could scarcely be persuaded to do before. She saw the difference between her carriage and others', her manner of wearing her clothes and others', her complexion and theirs. She exaggerated the difference. She brooded on it. Now she sat downcast and timid and hunted in face as the first evening she came. Now she appeared restless and excited.

If Mrs. Armour was not exactly sympathetic with her, she was quiet and forbearing, and General Armour, like Richard, tried to draw her out—but not on the same subjects. He dwelt upon what she did—the walks she took in the park those hours in the afternoon when, with Mackenzie or Colvin, she vanished into the beeches, making friends with the birds and deer and swans. But most of all she loved to go to the stables. She was, however, asked not to go unless Richard or General Armour was with her. She loved horses, and these were a wonder to her. She had never known any but the wild ungroomed Indian pony on which she had ridden in every fashion and over every kind of country. Mrs. Armour sent for a riding master and had riding costumes made for her. It was intended that she should ride every day as soon as she seemed sufficiently presentable. This did not appear so very far off, for she improved daily in appearance. Her hair was growing finer and was made up in the modest prevailing fashion. Her skin, not now exposed to an inclement climate and subject to the utmost care, was smoother and fairer. Her feet, incased in fine, well made boots, looked much smaller, her waist was shaped to fashion, and she was very straight and lissom. So many things she did jarred on her relatives that they were not fully aware of the great improvement in her appearance. Even Richard admitted her trying at times.

Marion went up to town to stay with Mrs. Townley, and there had to face a good deal of curiosity. People looked at her sometimes as if it was she and not Lali that was an Indian. But she carried things off bravely enough and answered those kind inquiries which one's friends make when we are in embarrassing situations with answers so calm and pleasant that people did not know what to think.

"Yes," she said in reply to Lady Balwood, "her sister-in-law might be in town later in the year, perhaps before the season was over. She could not tell. She was tired after her long voyage, and she preferred the quiet of Greyhope. She was fond of riding and country life, but still she would come to town for a time," and so on.

"Ah, dear me, how charming! And doesn't she resent her husband's absence during the honeymoon, or did the honeymoon occur before she came over to England?" And Lady Balwood tried to say it all playfully, and certainly said it somewhat loudly. She had daughters.

But Marion was perfectly prepared. Her face did not change expression. "Yes, they had had their honeymoon on the prairies. Frank was so fascinated with the life and the people. He had not come home at once because he was making she did not know how great a fortune over there in investments, and so Mrs. Armour came on before him, and, of course, so soon as he could get away from his business he would follow his wife."

And though Marion smiled her heart was very hot, and she could have slain Lady Balwood in her tracks. Lady Balwood then nodded a little patronizingly and babbled that "she hoped so much to see Mrs. Francis Armour. She must be so very interesting, the papers said so much about her."

Now, while this conversation was going on some one stood not far behind Marion who seemed much interested in her and what she said. But Marion did not see this person. She was startled presently, however, to hear a strong voice say softly over her shoulder, "What a charming woman Lady Balwood is! And so ingenuous."

She was grateful, tremulous, proud. Why had he, Captain Vidall, kept out of the way all these weeks just when she needed him most, just when he should have played the part of a man? Then she was feeling twinges at the heart too. She had seen Lady Agnes Martling that afternoon and had noticed how the news had worn on her. She felt how much better it had been had Frank come quietly home and married her, instead of doing the wild, scandalous thing that was making so many heartburnings. A few minutes ago she had longed for a chance to say something delicately acid to Lady Haldwell, once Julia Sherwood, who was there. Now there was a chance to give her bitter spirit tongue. She was glad, she dared not think how glad, to hear that voice again, but she was angry, too, and he should suffer for it, the more so because she recognized in the tone and afterward in his face that he was still absorbingly interested in her. There was a little burst of thanksgiving in her heart, and then she prepared a very notable commination service in her mind.

This meeting had been deftly arranged by Mrs. Townley, with the help of Edward Lambert, who now held her fingers with a kind of vanity of possession whenever he bade her goodby or met her. Captain Vidall had, in fact, been out of the country, had only been back a week and had only heard of Frank Armour's mesalliance from Lambert at an "at home" 48 hours before. Mrs. Townley guessed what was really at the bottom of Marion's occasional bitterness, and piecing together many little things dropped casually by her friend had come to the conclusion that the happiness of two people was at stake.

When Marion shook hands with Captain Vidall, she had herself exceedingly well under control. She looked at him in slight surprise and casually remarked that they had not chanced to meet lately in the run of small and earlies. She appeared to be unconscious that he had been out of the country, and also that she had been till very recently indeed at Greyhope. He hastened to assure her that he had been away and to lay siege to this unexpected barrier.

He knew all about Frank's affair, and though it troubled him he did not see why it should make any difference in his regard for Frank's sister. Fastidious as he was in all things, he was fastidiously deferential. Not an exquisite, he had all that vanity as to appearance so usual with the military man. Himself of the most perfect temper and sweetness of manner and conduct, the unusual disturbed him. Not possessed of a vivid imagination, he could scarcely conjure up this Indian bride at Greyhope.

But face to face with Marion Armour he saw what troubled her, and he determined that he would not meet her irony with irony, her assumed indifference with indifference. He had learned one of the most important lessons of life—never to quarrel with a woman. Whoever has so far erred has been foolish indeed. It is the worst of policy, to say nothing of its being the worst of art, and life should never be without art. It is absurd to be perfectly natural. Anything, anybody, can be that. Well, Captain Hume Vidall was something of an artist, more, however, in principle than by temperament. He refused to recognize the rather malicious adroitness with which Marion turned his remarks again upon himself, twisted out of all semblance. He was very patient. He inquired quietly, and as if honestly interested, about Frank and said—because he thought it safest as well as most reasonable—that naturally they must have been surprised at his marrying a native, but he himself had seen some such marriages turn out very well in Japan, India, the South Sea islands and Canada. He assumed that Marion's sister-in-law was beautiful and then disarmed Marion by saying that he thought of going down to Greyhope immediately to call on General Armour and Mrs. Armour and wondered if she was going back before the end of the season.

Quick as Marion was, this was said so quietly that she did not quite see the drift of it. She had intended staying in London to the end of the season, not because she enjoyed it, but because she was determined to face Frank's marriage at every quarter and have it over, once for all, so far as herself was concerned. But now, taken slightly aback, she said, almost without thinking, that she would probably go back soon—she was not quite sure—but certainly her father and mother would be glad to see Captain Vidall at any time.

Then, without any apparent relevancy, he asked her if Mrs. Frank Armour still wore her Indian costume. In any one else the question had seemed impertinent. In him it had a touch of confidence, of the privilege of close friendship. Then he said, with a meditative look and a very calm retrospective voice, that he was once very much in love with a native girl in India and might have become permanently devoted to her were it not for the accident of his being ordered back to England summarily.

This was a piece of news which cut two ways. In the first place, it lessened the extraordinary character of Frank's marriage, and it roused in her an immediate curiosity, which a woman always feels in the past "affairs" of her lover, or possible lover. Vidall did not take pains to impress her with the fact that the matter occurred when he was almost a boy, and it was when her earnest inquisition had drawn from him, bit by bit, the circumstances of the case, and she had forgotten many parts of her commination service and to preserve an effective neutrality in tone, that she became aware he was speaking ancient history. Then it was too late to draw back.

They had threaded their way through the crowd into the conservatory, where they were quite alone, and there, with only a little pyramid of hydrangeas between them, which she could not help but notice chimed well with the color of her dress, he dropped his voice a little lower and then suddenly said, his eyes hard on her, "I want your permission to go to Greyhope."

The tone drew her eyes hastily to his, and seeing she dropped them again. Vidall had a strong will, and, what is of more consequence, a peculiarly attractive voice. It had a vibration which made some of his words organlike in sound. She felt the influence of it. She said, a little faintly, her fingers toying with a hydrangea: "I am afraid I do not understand. There is no reason why you should not go to Greyhope without my permission."

"I cannot go without it," he persisted. "I am waiting for my commission from you."

She dropped her hand from the flower with a little impatient motion. She was tired; her head ached; she wanted to be alone. "Why are you enigmatical?" she said, then quickly: "I wish I knew what is in your mind. You play with words so."

(To Be Continued.)

He looked at her earnestly. "You have changed since last we met," he said.

"Yes," she answered. "Those red ones were causing so many runaways that I thought I would adopt a pair of a more somber hue."—Indianapolis Journal.

TOBACCO MANUFACTURERS LOSING TEN MILLIONS A YEAR.

Great Excitement in St. Louis. No Possibility of Preventing Still Greater Loss in 1896.

St. Louis.—[Special.] January 21.—Col. Wm. Kirchoff, Gen'l Western Manager of the American Tobacco Company has been a user of tobacco all his life and for years has smoked as many as twenty cigars daily. After using a few boxes of No-To-Bac the desire for tobacco is completely gone, and he is wonderfully improved in health. His cure is attracting a great deal of attention and comment and many prominent St. Louis business men are following his example. People are just waking up to the fact that the continued use of tobacco is very injurious.

An interview with Mr. H. L. Kramer the originator of No-To-Bac develops the fact that within three years it has reached an enormous sale almost entirely upon merit alone. Over one million boxes of No-To-Bac have been sold and 300,000 tobacco users cured. At the present rate No-To-Bac will cure in '96 from 200,000 to 300,000, and as Mr. Kramer says, "it is always the worst cases that want a cure; those who have chewed and smoked from boyhood—some of them, thirty, forty and fifty years, and we even have records of cures after sxty years of tobacco using. So, you can see that, if they are spending an average of $50.00 a year (this is a small amount), the cure of 200,000 tobacco users in '96 would result in the loss of the sale of tobacco amounting to over $10,000,000 which will be saved to the cured."

No-To-Bac is truly a medical wonder for it not only destroys the desire for tobacco, but invigorates the nervous system and marvelously increases weight and strength. Like all great successes, No-To-Bac has many imitations and substitutes, and the public should be warned against them. No-To-Bac is the original tobacco habit cure, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to cure the tobacco habit, by your own druggist.

A Jehu's Courtesy.

A noted American singer is fond of telling of a little experience she had in Boston once upon a time. She was to sing at an evening concert, and a carriage was to be sent for her. She was staying at the time with a friend, who had a suit of rooms in a large apartment house, in which the tube system of communication with the outer world prevailed. It was past the time when the carriage should have appeared, and the lady was growing a little nervous. She was sitting with her wraps on when the bell rang furiously. Hurrying to the tube herself, the prima donna said:

"Well?"

The reply came in a voice heavily charged with irritation.

"I'm a hackman," said the voice, "an I was sent here to git some cussed lady, an I don't know what in time her name is! I've rung ev'ry bell in this house! Are you her?"

When informed that the "cussed lady" herself was speaking to him, he coolly replied:

"Well, come on. We'll have to lope it all the way to the hall to get there on time!"—Detroit Free Press.

DRAWN OUT.

The pain of a small burn can be easily extracted by placing it near heat, which draws it out. One feels the pain going out as it were, and this illustration explains a broad principle of cure of many things. For instance, in a sprain, severe or mild, warmth by friction begins a true operation. But, first and foremost, use St. Jacobs Oil. The needed warmth and friction comes from rubbing it on. The skin and injured muscle grow soft and heated and take up the curative properties of the remedy, and it is not long before one feels the pain drawn out. Other properties are at work to strengthen and restore, and a positive cure follows like magic.

If the conceit was taken out of some people there wouldn't be enough of 'em left to hang clothes on.

THE SECRET OF GOOD CROPS.

The modern farmer is not content to use the antiquated tools and methods of his fathers. In this age of keen competition, the farmer who wishes to prosper, needs and gets the most improved farming implements; and by reading the best agricultural literature, he keeps in touch with the spirit of progress that pervades our farming communities. He is particular, also, in regard to the kind of seed he plants and the manner of planting it. The seeds must be of highest fertility and grown from the highest cultivated and most profitable varieties of stock. The great seed firm of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., fully appreciate this fact, as is attested by their progressive business methods and the quality of the seed which they supply farmers and gardeners through the dealers all over the country. The reliability and fertility of their seeds are proverbial and the largest seed business in the world has been created by their sale. In evidence of this firm's knowledge of the wants aad requirements of planters, large and small, is Ferry's Seed Annual for 1896. The book is of the greatest value to farmers and gardeners—a veritable encyclopædia of planting and farming knowledge. It contains more useful and practical information than many text books that are sold for a dollar or more, yet it will be mailed free to any one sending his name and address on a postal card to the firm.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

A SWEET YOUNG FACE.

Along the noisy city ways
And in this rattling city car,
On this the dreariest of days,
Perplexed with business fret and jar,

When suddenly a young, sweet face
Looked on my petulance and pain
And lent it something of its grace
And charmed it into peace again.

The day was just as bleak without,
My neighbors just as cold within,
And truth was just as full of doubt,
The world was just as full of sin.

But in the light of that young smile
The world grew pure, the heart grew warm,
And sunshine gleamed a little while
Across the darkness of the storm.

I did not care to seek her name,
I only said, "God bless thy life,
Thy sweet young grace be still the same,
Or happy maid or happy wife."

1858. —Phillips Brooks.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

Surely no building of its size ever contained more food for the imagination that my friend Norman's riverside bungalow. It was fairly crammed with curiosities from many lands.

Jack Norman had not only "been everywhere and seen everything," as the saying is—he had brought home a shipload of mate but convincing witnesses.

Capital yarns he would spin about his treasures too, but of one object neither he nor his pretty Spanish-American wife could be induced to speak, except casually.

"The Liberator is sacred," he would say when asked where he got it, or "The Liberator has been in an earthquake," when its battered appearance was commented upon.

It was the figure of a satyr in bronze, about 3 feet high, with the legs and hoofs of a goat, short, blunted horns, huge pointed ears, grinning, lopsided mouth and a broken nose. Its left eye had also been in the wars—the metal was dented as if by a heavy blow, which had changed the figure's original roguish expression into a hideous leer.

Often have I seen Jack put his arm round its wry neck and talk to it with all the affection that a parent bestows on his offspring. But it was Mrs. Norman who gave me the clew to the secret.

Jack had been seriously ill—a return of jungle fever. His wife came to me in the drawing room.

"Oh, he is so much better," she said, with her dark eyes swimming. "He soon will be well. Ah, me! What would I do without my brave, true husband? I think no wife has ever been so happy as I. And"—turning to the hideous satyr—"you gave him to me, you dear old thing!"

She flung her arms round the twisted neck and kissed the grinning mouth. A dozen times she pressed her warm lips to the cold bronze.

I could not help smiling.

"You laugh," she said, "but it is true. Some day Jack shall tell you, perhaps. We do not like to speak of it. There is a grave beyond the sea. A mother tends it who would grieve if the truth were known."

Soon afterward I had the good luck to do Norman a service.

"I must make you a present," he said. "Look round and tell me what you would like. I bar the Liberator, of course."

"I won't take anything," I answered. "If you'll tell me why you set such store by that old bronze, we shall be quits."

"I couldn't have done it a week ago for a certain reason. But the person concerned is dead." I had noticed that Mrs. Norman was in deep mourning.

He took a nude, guardless sword from the wall. "Do you know what this is?" he asked.

"Some sort of sword," I replied.

"It is a Nicaraguan machete, carried by all the men and many of the women in that unquiet country. Look along the edge."

I did so and perceived a dull stain near the square point. Jack drew his finger down a long white scar on his bronzed cheek.

"That stain is blood. It came from here—some of it. I got a worse cut on the head. Now I'll tell you the story."

He lit a cigar, flung himself into an easy chair and began.

* * * * * *

"Some years ago I had an interest in a Segovian gold mine. Segovia, I should say, is in Nicaragua, between the Great lake and Honduras. Tiring of the wild life, I resolved to visit Granada. One night I passed in the hotel, and that was too long, for I was eaten alive. Next day I sought out a vacant house, found the owner and struck a bargain.

"The house I rented was an immense building, erected on three sides of a courtyard paved with marble. There was not a pane of glass in it, but plenty of iron bars. The courtyard had a broken fountain in the center, waterless, of course, and half hidden by rubbish and shrubs, run wild long since.

"The time hung pretty heavily upon my hands, so one morning I set to work to clear away the rubbish that choked the basin of the fountain. At the very bottom of the heap I found the Liberator.

"I cleaned the statue myself. Pepe dared not touch it at first. He said it was a Carib god. It wasn't in its present battered condition then, and I considered it a great find. We set it up on a shelf above my bed, and in 48 hours I had forgotten all about it.

"Of course I visited the cafes, where you may drink bad chocolate and gamble to your heart's content. Everybody does both there, and 'when one is in Rome'—you know the adage?

"At a gambling house I met Don Manuel Arguello. By way of return for the money he had won of me he took me home and introduced me to his mother and cousin. After that I called every day, for I had fallen in love with the Senora Isabel.

"The passion of my life was returned. But I was unaware that Don Manuel also loved her. I did not learn until too late that he had long looked forward to repairing his broken fortunes by marriage with his cousin. He enlightened me—I need not describe the scene—and I refused to stand aside. Then he threatened to take my life.

"As you know, my wife is a capital horsewoman, and it was our custom to ride daily on the Los Cocos road. One morning my darling failed to meet me at the trysting place. I dismounted to wait, leaving my horse with Pepe. Presently he called me, and I found him examining the tracks.

"'Senor,' said he in his grave fashion, 'here is the trail of the senora's mare. It is fresh. It was made this morning.' He moved on, bent double.

"'Other horses have halted here, have plunged about and have gone. The senora's mare went with them.' Again he moved on.

"'Ah!' he exclaimed presently, 'there is the print of a lasso ring which has missed the mark. There the senora's mare halted suddenly, like the wise animal she is. That lasso did not miss, and she has had a fall before maybe'—

"'What on earth are you driving at?' I cried.

"'The senora turned there and spurred the mare,' he said. 'The other horses followed in a great hurry, senor. She did not gallop far, as we have seen. Afterward she went quietly.'

"'For the love of heaven tell me what you have learned!' I cried.

"'A mile farther on, senor,' answered the Indian stolidly, 'there is a path which leads to Don Manuel's hacienda. If the senora's mare turns there, that is where the Senora Isabel will have gone—not willingly, senor.'

"We galloped hard to the byway spoken of. Sure enough, all the tracks left the road there. The observant Indian was right.

"I had my pistols, he his machete. We pursued the abductors and caught them before they reached the hacienda—as ugly a quartet as I ever set eyes on. The prudent Don Manuel had directed the business from a safe distance.

"His fellows showed fight, of course, but I managed to wing one at the first fire, when they all turned tail. I took my darling back to her aunt, with whom she was quite safe. Don Manuel did not show up. He knew better."

Mrs. Norman came in just then, and Jack abruptly changed the subject. Half an hour later Jack resumed.

* * * * * *

"My darling was very fond of her aunt and unwilling to hurt her, so we said nothing of her son's villainy. But when Pepe and I got back to our ruinous palace he advised me to barricade the door of my room. However, I didn't think it worth while, but at nightfall I stretched myself on the hide bed and fell asleep, with a revolver close to my hand.

"About midnight I was awakened by a cut on the head, which, luckily, did not stun me, or I shouldn't be spinning this yarn now. I started up with the blood streaming down my face.

"Don Manuel stood over me with my revolver in one hand and an uplifted machete in the other. There's the machete.

"'Now you shall die, robber!' he hissed and aimed another blow at me, which I avoided. Shouting loudly for Pepe, I grappled with him and got hold of his wrists. I was the stronger, but loss of blood had weakened me. He wrenched his right hand free and cut me across the cheek. The blow dazed me; I staggered and fell on the bed.

"Before I could rise his knee was on my chest, the machete at my throat. I felt the edge. With a last effort I flung him from me. That instant the bed heaved and tossed, the stout walls shook, the sleeping city awoke wih a scream of terror. Dazed as I was, I knew what had happened. So did my enemy.

"'The earthquake shall not save you!' he yelled, and rushed at me over the quivering floor. But again the bed heaved beneath me. Something fell from above. There was a dull, sickening thud—a scream of agony—and Don Manuel rolled over and lay still, leaving the machete across my neck. Ah, that was a close shave!

"I staggered to my feet and groped my way through clouds of dust to the street, which was full of people, shrieking, wailing, praying to the saints. An hour the earthquake lasted, shock following shock.

"When all was quiet and the people had ceased to wail and pray, I returned to the palace. Pepe lay in his hammock, bound and gagged. Together we entered the room where I had so narrowly escaped death.

"The body of Don Manuel, with the skull crushed in, lay beside my bed. Close at hand lay the Liberator in the condition in which you see it. The statue had toppled over in the nick of time, killed the would be murderer and set me free. On such chances do the lives of men hang.

"Don Manuel's mother never knew the truth respecting his death. It was attributed to the earthquake, as also were the cuts on my head and cheek. I left Granada as soon as I could, taking my bride with me.

"Now you know why we treasure the Liberator, and why we have not dared to talk about it."—Answers.

New Sort of Poker.

A new variation of poker has sprung up. It deals out the entire pack in equal numbers to all players. If five are playing, for example, each will get ten cards at the start. If seven are playing, each gets seven, the three cards left over being put aside. Then, instead of drawing, each player discards as he likes from his hand, so that he shall have five cards to play with, making the best hand possible out of those dealt him. Hands are apt to run high in this sort of game. It is called "peculiar."

A poker game in which six cards were dealt, discards and draws being so regulated that only five cards constituted the final hand, has been known for some time, but this is a further development of that idea. It is said to have originated along the shores of Long Island.—New York Sun.

A GENERAL OF CUBA.

HIS REASONS FOR BELIEF IN HIS COUNTRY'S TRIUMPH.

Pacific Efforts Always Spurned—Stronger Than In Last Contest—Food Enough For Several Years—Wants Belligerency Recognition From the United States.

Major General Manuel Suarez Delgado, commonly spoken of as "General Suarez," is the insurgent chief in charge of the Fifth army corps of the Cuban forces, with headquarters at present in the vicinity of Manicaragua.

Standing full 6 feet in height, he presents an ideal appearance as an insurgent chief, his massive form clad in the simple white linen costume of the country. His features are of a decidedly aquiline cast, and his eyes show the faculty of ready command over men.

The headquarters of the Fifth Cuban army corps consist at present of a large deserted tobacco shed, without walls and with a roof partially blown away by the recent severe cyclone prevalent in Cuba. The building and its distant approaches are guarded efficiently by a large detail of cavalrymen, who are well armed and show evidence of more military training than is the present status of the bulk of the Cuban forces in the province of Santa Clara, otherwise known as "Sas Villas."

The staff is composed of a fine looking body of men, most of whom have given up good businesses or lucrative professions to assist in the organization and operation of the Cuban "Army of Liberty."

At present there is with the general Ennesto F. Stirling, the civil governor of the province, who is on a tour of inspection preparatory to the establishment of places for the manufacture of clothing and complete equipment, save the arms and ammunition, for both the Cuban infantry and cavalry. Very complete shops are at present going at full blast in the mountains of Santiago and Puerto Principe, established there by General In Chief Gomez. These supply the armies with headquarters in those places, and those to be established are intended to clothe and equip the large force to be shortly centralized in this province.

He says every pacific means have been used to get from the Spanish cortes and rulers a proper recognizance of Cuban rights, but without appreciable effect. Cuba is allowed 30 out of about 400 members of the Spanish legislative body, and of this ineffective number the election of 24 is controlled from Madrid, thus leaving six votes effective for Cuban rights and 394 dominated by a selfish desire for Spanish aggrandizement.

Petitions innumerable have been sent for the amelioration of specific abuses, and all without effect. Unjust and grievous taxes are levied upon all the Cuban possessions, and the laws regulating domestic manufacturers are so hard that the residents of the island are compelled to buy almost every manufactured article of commerce at an exorbitant figure from Spanish manufacturers, and from them solely, as the import duties practically shut out from Cuba the less expensive and vastly better made produce of other nations.

This is especially so of the United States, which is the natural market to which the Cubans go for the purchase of manufactured commodities, and to where they undoubtedly will go should they succeed in gaining their independence.

As to the probable duration of this war, should victory be delayed the country has food enough in sight to support 30,000 men for years. Should this prove insufficient, the smaller towns will be taken and their provisions used, as was done the last five years of the last war.

In that struggle 7,000 men resisted the Spanish forces for ten years. There are now 30,000 insurgents in the field, and when sufficient arms can be had, 20,000 more are ready to join the army.

The general believes that the number of men in the field, their discipline and equipment are such as to merit the recognition of their belligerency by the United States, which he thinks would tend to speedily terminate the war in favor of Cuba, first by the tremendous moral force such an act would have upon the nations at large, and second because then Cuban money would have no hindrance in its outflow for American arms and ammunition.

General Suarez is absolutely confident of Cuban success, and that not far off.—Sylvester Scovel in Pittsburg Dispatch.

What $10 Did.

The Owings building, at Dearborn and Adams streets, Chicago, valued at $350,000, changed ownership recently under curious circumstances. It is 16 stories high and was built seven years ago.

Francis Owings, who built it, is said to have had just $10 when he started. With this $10 he secured an option on the ground from W. W. Strong and wife. Then he borrowed $150,000 from Hetty Green of New York and leased the ground, put up part of the building, mortgaged it a second time, and completed it.

The Strongs bought the mortgages and took the building, and Mr. Owings lost his capital of $10.

Bull Run's Field Sold.

Pursuant to a decree of the court of Prince William county, Va., over 550 acres of Yorkshire tract belonging to the McLean estate, and lying on both sides of Bull Run and adjoining Blackburn's ford, have been sold at public auction. This land embraced a large portion of the historic Bull Run battlefield. One of the purchasers is the son of Major Wilmer McLean, who resided upon the property at the beginning of the war, and in whose house at Appomattox the terms of surrender between Lee and Grant were drawn, and thus it was said by Major McLean that the war began and ended on him.

APACHE KID'S CAREER.

Was a Good Indian Until His Stepfather Was Murdered.

Apache Kid, the supposed leader of the Indians who have recently resumed their murderous operations, was 12 years ago first sergeant of a company of scouts organized by the government. He is said to have done faithful and excellent service until a white man murdered his stepfather. The Kid shot the slayer and surrendered to the government authorities at San Carlos. While being taken to the guardhouse, with several other Indians, he escaped, and gathering a lot of bad Indians around him took to the mountains, where he began a series of depredations.

APACHE KID.

The Kid and his band were finally captured by General Miles, and the Kid was sentenced by court martial to a term of imprisonment at Alcatraz. He was pardoned after he had served a year and was taken back to San Carlos. Then he was rearrested at the instance of the civil authorities and tried at Globe, A. T., and sentenced to a long term in Yuma prison. On the way to prison he killed Sheriff Raymond and left the wagon driver for dead and once more escaped to the hills.

Innumerable murders have been committed by him, or at least have been attributed to him. He has pillaged outlying settlements and raided ranches with astonishing audacity.

A QUEER FIND.

A Petrified Pony Discovered by Cowboys on the Plains.

H. Clay Emmet, a young cowboy, who passed through Belton, Tex., the other night, reports a singular find made by him during a cattle hunting raid recently. The find was nothing more or less than a petrified pony, standing erect and complete in all its parts. Emmet says that he and his partner, B. C. Woodville, were riding across the prairie late one afternoon when their tired ponies neighed and whinnied as if they were aware of the presence of another animal.

Looking around, they discovered what they thought was a broncho tethered to a mesquite which crowned the summit of a little knoll to the northward. They found that the horse was fastened by a chain, but stood so rigidly still and seemed altogether so mysterious that their own horses reared and plunged as if in fright. Finally they dismounted and found that the pony was petrified, not a hair or a hoof amiss. Emmet says that some ranchman years ago must have chained the poor horse there, leaving him to starve upon the plains. As the ribs of the animal are plainly visible in the petrifaction and he seems to have been otherwise much emaciated, this is most probably the case. Emmet will arrange to have the strange find exhibited in some museum.—Philadelphia Times.

SPOT CASH WITH HIS BRIDE.

Widow of Seventy-four Pays $20,000 For a Young Husband.

Mrs. Sarah Ray of Indianapolis, a widow of 74, announced several days ago she would marry again, and if any young man of good character and good family was the suitor she would make him a present of $20,000.

George Brown, a society man of 26, thereupon paid court to the widow and was accepted. In the meantime her heirs at law began lunacy proceedings against her, but the jury found she was sane.

Fearing that other steps would be taken to prevent the nuptials, Brown and Mrs. Ray eloped and were married by a peace justice in an adjoining county.

As the ceremony that made them man and wife was concluded she handed her husband a check for $20,000.

Aftermath of the Earthquake.

Another queer happening attributed to the recent earthquake that shivered up through the middle states from the gulf to the lakes is that many wells have gone dry and not a few cisterns and reservoirs have become empty since the shock. In the case of the latter it is probable that the cement cracked or the construction was otherwise weakened, but this explanation does not entirely explain the case of the wells. The bottom of a well in Lagro township, near Wabash, Ind., dropped out entirely, and nothing that has been used to sound the depths of the hole has touched the bottom. To all appearances there is an immense cavern under the well hole.

Paderewski's Modesty.

A well known banjo player of Richmond sent his nickel plated banjo to Paderewski when the latter was dining with some friends and asked him to write on the sheepskin a short musical sentiment. This is what Paderewski wrote and signed:

"I have not the pleasure of being a performer on this beautiful instrument; am only a piano player."

NEW EXCISE SCHEME.

PROPOSAL TO KEEP A DEPUTY SHERIFF IN MISSISSIPPI SALOONS.

Representative Dees' Unique Bill to Be Presented to the Mississippi Legislature. A Radical Feature Which He Thinks Will Pass.

An excise bill with unique features is to be introduced in the Mississippi legislature shortly by Representative M. A. Dees. The present law is generally unsatisfactory, being too severe for citizens who favor the sale of liquor and not severe enough to please the Prohibitionists. Mr. Dees proposes to take all the responsibility for the observance of the liquor laws off the shoulders of the saloon keeper and put it on a deputy sheriff to be placed on duty in every saloon in the state. He asks people to give his proposition careful consideration before they follow the perhaps not unnatural first impulse to jump on the bill because of its radical features.

The bill provides that a saloon may be opened in any part of the state where a local prohibitory law is not in force on the payment by the saloon keeper of $1,600 for a license. Of this sum $500 is to go to the state treasury, $500 to the county treasury, $500 to the municipal treasury of the place where the saloon is opened, and the remaining $100 is to be set aside as a fund for paying a temporary deputy in case of need. From the money paid to the county and municipality a salary is to be paid to a regular saloon deputy, who is to be on duty in the saloon at all times when the saloon is open for business. It is to be the sole duty of the deputy to see that there are no violations of the law in the saloon to which he is assigned. Under no circumstances is the deputy to act as bartender, clerk or in any capacity whatever in the service of the saloon keeper. All statutes at present in force placing any responsibility on saloon keepers for selling to minors or after legal hours, and for all other breaches of the law, are to be repealed, and the saloon keeper is to take the following oath:

"I solemnly swear that I will not sell any intoxicating liquors during the continuance of this license, except in the sight of and under the police supervision and direction of the deputy sheriff, and I will faithfully obey his instructions in all matters that affect or concern the police supervision of the dram shop for which I have a license."

Saloons may be open only 12 hours in each day, and never between the hours of midnight and 6 a. m., nor between midnight Saturday and 6 a. m. Monday. But the saloon keeper may choose for himself the hours of opening and closing, provided his place is open but 12 hours in the 18 specified by the law. If the saloon keeper or an assistant, or any one for him, sells even one drink when the deputy sheriff is not present, his license is to be forfeited, and he is to be prosecuted for violation of his oath.

Not only is the deputy not to act as bartender, or to go behind the bar, but, further, he must not take a drop of intoxicating liquor of any kind in or about the saloon in which he is on duty. He is not to accept any gift, "or kindness," from the saloon keeper that may be construed by the latter as putting the deputy under an obligation. The deputy is alone responsible if any minor, drunkard, Indian, intoxicated or other prohibited person gets a drink. He is to be responsible for all disorderly conduct or any kind of lawlessness in or about the saloon, and if he fails in his duty he is made liable on his bond and must be discharged and prosecuted. A room is to be set apart as a kind of temporary jail, in which the deputy may place any disorderly person until a constable is summoned and arrives. Every one in the saloon is to be subject to the call of the deputy for assistance in preserving order.

Mr. Dees thinks his ideas are sound, and that his bill has an excellent chance of becoming a law. He argues that "the only way we can expect to see our laws executed and obeyed is to make it to the pecuniary interest of the party intrusted with their observance and execution." He doesn't think people will obey the law just because it is right so to do until the millennium arrives. So he would make it pay both the saloon keeper to obey the law and the deputy to see that the law is obeyed and make the penalty severe and sure.—New York Sun.

IT WILL COME BACK.

The Return of the Bustle an Edict of Fashion.

Announcement has been made that the bustle is to be revived. In its incipient stages it has already appeared. The obnoxious little accessory of woman's toilet, which for the past five years has been in disuse, is no longer to be ignored. A premonition of the renewed interest in the formidable little pads which supplied nature's deficiencies was given when padded hips came in.

A tiny roll measuring about 8 inches across and 4 deep is to be inserted in the dress skirt. Since the abolition of haircloth it has become necessary to substitute something which will fill the requirements and hold out the ripple skirt of a Louis Seize coat. The bustle seems to fulfill the mission admirably.—New York World.

Up to Date Advertising.

Two recent new things in window displays have been seen in New York—one, a man wearing the costume that is the trademark of a brand of cigarettes sitting in the window and smoking cigarettes; the other, a man wearing a fancy coat with lace at the sleeves, and a paper crown, and a false nose, sitting in the window of a Broadway tailor shop sewing on a coat.

To Insure Cyclists.

A bicyclists' accident insurance company has just been organized in Westfield, Mass. It proposes to insure bicycle riders against all manner of accidents met with while riding their machines.

A RIVAL TO VOLAPUK.

Esperanto Is the Name of a New Universal Language.

Esperanto is not the name of a new liqueur or of a new appetizer, nor that of a popular comic song, but it is the name of an artificial language which is fast gaining adherents in France, and that is already able to boast of many followers in Russia, Germany, England, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Spain, the United States and even in some parts of Africa.

Among those most proficient in the language is a Frenchman, bearing the aristocratic name of D'Eyssautier. He says that Esperanto is by no means a new language, nor even a recent discovery. This international language has been in existence nearly ten years, and there are at least 10,000 adherents in different parts of the world.

The author or originator of Esperanto is a Russian gentleman, Dr. Zamenhof of Warsaw. He calls it a universal language. He says that one may learn its grammar in an hour and all its vocabulary of words in a few days.

Max Muller writes it with the greatest ease, and so does Tolstoi, who is one of the leading contributors to the official organ of the language, The Esperantisto, which, by the way, is utterly opposed to the Volapuk organ, for it has literary tendencies.

The fact is, Esperanto hopes to dethrone Volapuk altogether. Verses may be written in it, and translations of the "Iliad" and "Hamlet" have been published. This new language, which means the "person who hopes," is perhaps better known in Russia than in any other country. Russia is its birthplace.—New York World.

A REMARKABLE PEARL.

A most peculiarly shaped pearl of great size and value was found by Charles N. Ames while opening oysters in his cafe at Pittsfield, Me., the other day. The oyster containing the pearl was raised and gathered in Narragansett bay at the mouth of the Providence river.

Two Maine hunters went into Mr. Ames' restaurant and asked for "a dozen on the half, quick!" Two ordinary oysters were opened. In the third bivalve Mr. Ames' knife struck something. When the shells fell open a most extraordinary pearl was disclosed. It was a startlingly lifelike reproduction of a human head. There were the partly bald head, deep set eyes, long straight nose and thin lips disclosing beautiful ridges like teeth, and a pointed beard of an Italian, Spaniard or European of high degree. The hunters said it looked very much like the death mask of Columbus. Mr. Ames agreed with them.

The pearl protrudes about half an inch from the surface of the shell, to which it is firmly attached at the back of the neck. It is surrounded by a circular band of muscle which looks very much like one of the styles of ruffled collars worn by the noblemen of the middle ages.

NEW SORT OF CRANK.

He Seems to Find Satisfaction In Snatching Off Buttons.

A new crank has made his appearance in New York in the person of Antonio Volpe, an Italian, 18 years old. He is what may be called "a button snatcher." Policeman Klan saw him in the crowd around a dry goods store window.

He dodged in and out among the women so often that the policeman thought he was a pickpocket. He watched him closely, hoping to catch him in the act. He finally noticed that he only brushed against the women who wore large buttons on their coats. To his surprise he saw that all of these women had lost at least one button. Presently he caught the young Italian in the act of pulling one of the buttons from a woman's coat and arrested him.

On the way to the station house the prisoner threw a handful of large buttons into the street. When he was searched at the station, 40 other buttons were found in his pockets.

THIS HORSE WEARS WOOL.

Broker Martens' Acquisition Has a Coat Like Astrakhan.

Clarence G. Martens, a broker who has a stock farm near Mount Vernon, N. Y., has just bought a horse which has all the appearance of a huge black sheep. He is about 15.2 hands high, and his hide is covered with a woolly coat, black and as soft as silk. When Mr. Martens drove him through the streets of Mount Vernon recently, he attracted crowds of curious people.

"He is an inbred Wilkes colt," said Mr. Martens, "and is 4 years old. I have never speeded him, but the man from whom I bought him assures me that he can trot in 2:30. He was bred in California and is by Sable Wilkes, dam Rosema Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes."

The horse's coat looks exactly like a piece of astrakhan wool. Mr. Martens says that he will shear it next spring.

Proposed Permanent Negro Exhibition.

A movement has been started at Washington by some colored people, having for its object the establishment in that city of a permanent negro exhibition. Their plan is to get congress to take the matter in hand and establish the exhibition with the necessary appropriation, and they will ask that the affair be kept under the control of the government. The Exposition association of Atlanta is to be asked to allow the removal after their fair closes of the negro exhibit, which has attracted so much interest there. This, if secured, is to form the nucleus of the permanent exhibition.

To Tax Lard For Veterans.

A bill will be introduced in the Virginia legislature imposing a specific tax on oleomargarine and compound lards for the benefit of disabled Confederate veterans. It is calculated that $50,000 per year will be realized by it.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

RV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY MARCH 6 ..... 1896

By a unanimous vote the House of Representatives has passed the Dingley bill relating to the fur seal industry, and it is probable therefore that there will be sufficient strength to pass it in the Senate. The bill is a peculiar one, and deals with the seal fisheries in a most radical way. It directs the President to negotiate with the governments of Great Britain, Russia and Japan for the purpose of aggreeing upon a plan of protecting the fisheries in accordance with the findings of the Paris tribunal, and provides that if this aggreement be not concluded in time to govern the season of 1896 the Secretary of the Treasury shall have every seal on the Pribyloff Islands killed and sell the skins for the benefit of the treasury The bill, it will be seen, calls for a thorough protection of the of the fisheries or a complete extermination of the seals. The alternative seems like one of wanton destruction, and yet is really a well considered act of legislation The present arrangement for the protection of the seals is a farce, and a very costly one at that. It affords really no protection at all, for the killing of seals in the open sea includes so many females that the young on the islands die by the thousands of starvation, and the fisheries in this way are in a process of slow and cruel extinction. According to the reports of American officials there were found on the islands last season over 28,000 seal pups which had died of starvation, their mothers having been killed at sea while in search of food beyond the sixty-mile zone. This means of course that the herd will be eventually exterminated if present conditions continue. The necessity of the alternative of the Dingley bill is therefore apparent. Either all the nations interested in sealing and boardering on the North Pacific Ocean must unite to prevent not only poaching on the Pribyloff Islands but pelagic sealing as well, or else our Government should exterminate the herd at once, thus putting an end to the cruelty of leaving the young to starve, and at the same time saving the Government the expense of a costly, troublesome and useless patrol of Behring Sea.

The statistican of the U. S. Mint in San Francisco has sent to every part of the mining section of the State a circular saying: "Enclosed is a list of the mines in your locality with the request that you kindly correct it and add any new ones. It would be a great favor if you would make or obtain an approximate estimate of the product of any of these mines for 1895, which your familiarity with the section will doubtless enable you to do readily. Circulars have been sent to all these mines, but this many neglect to answer. In order that the county and State should receive its due credit for bullion product in the Government reports, it is important for us to get full returns. In obtaining these we have to depend largely upon gentlemen like yourself, who have a public-spirited interest in the mining industry. Will you please estimate also the average number of miners employed in the vicinity and the average rate of wages paid." Such information is of direct value to the mining industry of the State and coast, and a general compliance with the above request would be of material aid. Information so received is held as confidental, the aggregate of the figures, authenticated and compared, being alone given out for publication.

The Kansas negroes are organizing an association of ex-slaves for the purpose of securing pensions. They propose to form societies of colored men who will pledge themselves not to support any man for congress who will not promise to vote for a bill to pension all ex-slaves. This is a modern development of the "forty acres and a mule" idea. If carried out, the country would be surprised at the former wealth of slave owners. It would be discovered that the number of slaves had been grossly under-estimated. The army pension roll would sink into insignificance beside the slave pension roll. No doubt we will have many Republican statesmen who will advocate this proposition—in return for votes But as firemen, policemen, school teachers and mail carriers are demanding pensions, it is not suprising that the ex-slaves should put in their bill. They have a moral right to some compensation, and as long as the pie is being passed to everybody else, they might as well have a slice.

Reports from the East that the stock of California dried and canned fruits is growing short, and also that there is an increased demand for the same, are welcome information for Californians. The prospects are favorable for an immense crop in this State during the coming season, and as an actived demand usually means good prices, our fruit growers will take gleasure in making an effort to meet all demands on their orchards.

During the next three months Southern California will be engaged in picking its orange crop, which is estimated at 2,800,000 boxes, or two-thirds of a full yield, The crop will sell for $5,000,000, which is an excellent return from an industry only fifteen years old. About $33,000,000 has been invested in the orange groves of Southern California. There are in bearing 10,000 acres and 80,000 more acres are planted.

Cuba has been recognized. The United States Senate took action late Friday evening. The galleries were filled and enthusiasm ruled the hour. The resolution was passed by a vote of sixty-four to six.

Corbett still holds the belt for heavy-weight talking.

CREAMERY MAN AND PATRON.

Built on the Model Herein Described, They Will Be Perfect.

The creamery manager should be reliable, honest and industrious. He should be thoroughly competent to fulfill each and every task in connection with the creamery. There are a great many little things about a creamery for the manager or butter maker to look after that the outside world knows nothing about. To be a thorough butter maker he must be competent to judge and grade the milk as it comes to the creamery and know how to sample milk for testing and study the strength of his acid for testing. He must know how to temper his milk for proper separation. He must always keep posted on the temperature of his room and how to handle his cream so it will be in proper shape to churn when churning time comes. He must also know when and how to churn the same. He must know the proper amount of salt and color to use at different seasons of the year, and to be successful nowadays he must be thoroughly acquainted with the Babcock system of testing. He must know and understand all the working parts of his machinery. He must have a good eye and a quick ear, so that he can tell at an instant by the sound of the machinery whether everything is working right or not. He must try to cultivate a friendly relation with all his patrons and take a friendly interest in their end of the business. He must encourage them to read dairy papers that they may profit thereby, exchange opinions and make creamery life one grand sweet song of prosperity.

On the other hand, he must not pretend to know it all. Each and every one of us will find plenty of room for improvement if we are only inclined to think so He must not quarrel with his patrons for little or no reason, but, on the other hand, overlook some things which may happen contrary to his belief. He must ever be on the alert to learn something new and always bear in mind the old adage that cleanliness is next to godliness, but in the creamery it should be vice versa.

Now, then, take the patron who tries to make a success of dairying; watch his moves as he goes along in line. First to his dairy, notice the kind of cows he keeps and how he takes care of them. You will always notice that the more he makes out of his cows the more he will try to make and the better he will care for them. You will always find that his milk will come to the creamery in good shape both winter and summer, and that if he delivers it himself he will always be on time and not come straggling along when everything is shut down and cleaned up for the day (then if the butter maker does not start up and run his milk through he is the laziest, meanest man on earth), and you will always find that if such does happen to him the creamery man is too willing to forgive him, for he knows at a glance that some mishap has fallen. Such a man is always the butter maker's friend. —Address of W. J. Smith at Iowa Dairy Convention.

Can This Be True?

Southern consumers of butter, as a general rule, do not know how to discriminate between a first class article of butter and a fairly good article. This is more the case in the country villages and towns than in the very large cities. In shipping to the average town in the gulf states, even if the butter is not fairly good, if it has a good color and is not conspicuous for the unsightly streaks running through it, it will, when consigned to the average commission man, sell about as well as the real "gilt edged" article. This is wrong, of course, but it is a fact all the same. Our people, then, must need education to determine good butter from the indifferent article. Of course all this will change in time, but we only mention the matter as a fact that may not be generally known.—Cor. Southern Live Stock Journal.

Dairy and Creamery.

The second annual meeting of the National Dairy union will be held in Washington Jan. 10, 11 and 12, 1895. It has only been in existence a year, yet it has already a membership of 400. The first meeting was held at Chicago, where the union was organized. During the meeting at Washington the delegates will assemble in Willard's hall for their sessions. Willard's hotel will be their headquarters. It is to be hoped that all the farmers' clubs and institute societies that can do so will send live delegates to the convention. The United States must be made the leading dairy country of the world. For this purpose it will be necessary to hustle at home and fight oleomargarine on the outside, but it can be done.

Take the butter directly from the churn to the butter worker while it is yet in the granular state.

The cheesemaking and dairy interests of this country sustained a great loss in the death of Mr. C. W. Horr of Wellington, O. Mr. Horr was a classical scholar, having been educated at Antioch college, founded by Horace Mann, at Yellow Springs, O. But his tastes were rural, and he devoted his knowledge and his naturally brilliant powers of mind to building up the dairy and creamery interests of his country. No man has ever done more in this field than Mr. Horr did. He was not over 60, if he was so old, at his too early death. Ex-Congressman R. G. Horr of Michigan is a brother of the late C. W. Horr.

One of the chief objects of the National Dairy convention at Washington will be to urge on congress the passage of the bills already before that body, giving to the states power to regulate as they see fit the sale of all imitation dairy products.

The way to prepare wooden dairy and creamery implements and vessels for using is to take them perfectly clean and pour boiling water all over them. This scalds, swells and tightens them up. After the boiling water is poured off dash cold water all over them to cool them. Then they are ready for use.

Apple Pomace For Cows.

The pomace from a cider mill is exceedingly acceptable to cows and horses as well. It is also healthful if not given to excess. One peck a day may be fed with advantage to cows in milk as well as dry ones. Indeed apples are so desirable a food for all animals that it will pay well to plant some of the sweet kinds especially for them and to keep a stock on hand all the winter for this purpose.

Summary Of The Latest News From The Lakeside.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—The recent snow storm detained the two ore teams at Keeler for two or three days. They started for Darwin Wednesday. About an inch of snow fell in Keeler.

J. A. McKenzie waited until after the storm was over and went out to the mine on Wednesday afternoon.

It is rumored that a new resturant will soon be opened in Keeler.

Work on the new addition to Boland's store is going on very slowly owing to the sickness of carpenter Sylvester who went to Lone Pine to get medical attendance. He had a slight stroke of paralysis.

Quite a number of men looking for work have been in this section lately. Some of them are from Tulare County and they say work is very scarce on the other side of the mountains. (All the same here.)

It is reported that H. J. Robinson of George's Creek has sold some mining property near Hunter's Canyon to Los Angeles parties, and he may also dispose of his ranch property to the same parties.

E. M. Huntley of Cerro Gordo, and several other miners from there came down Tuesday on account of the storm, there being no work. Some of the boys went to Lone Pine for a change.

Miller's Mojave stage left Keeler on time Monday night and up to Wednesday afternoon it had not reached Mojave. It was due there on Tuesday evening. It is thought that the road has been washed out.

It is rumored that Sam Kee of Hawthorne, known to the business world as Charley Qui will soon build a China store in Keeler, probably this month. He has already ordered the necessary lumber.

There was a big landslide of rocks and snow in Beveridge district one day last week. Hundreds of tons slid off the sides and top of the mountain, completely covering up the trail for several hundred feet. The mill will probably start up some time in July for crushing ore. There are two or three arastras working there now.

Mr. L. F. J. Wrinkle, formerly of Keeler, left San Francisco one day last week for Mexico to examine some mining properties there. It is reported he has secured several good claims in that section.

Some time ago a former resident of this section wrote a friend in the East that he was engaged to a young lady up the Valley. Nothing was heard in response at the time, but before the time for the ceremony the lady is said to have reconsidered the proposition and jilted the engaged gentleman. Almost a year elapsed and one day the Keeler man received a beautiful baby carriage by express. (?) He had forgotten to notify his friend in the East that the marriage was off. He was equal to the occasion however, and after winking his other 'eye' emphatically, he sold the outfit to a newly married copuple whose expectations were (what.) Moral—Always tell your friends on an occasion of this kind.

Ten or twelve acres of new vats will be completed in a week or less at the lower soda works. The ground has been very wet and has made progress very slow at the work of making vats.

E. C. Garlick and R. Kennedy left for Darwin Tuesday.

A. C. Stevens has quit work at Boland's store and gone to Lone Pine.

R. F. Boland went to Darwin one day last week on some mining business.

OLIVER A. SUDDEN.

Correspondence

A correspondent at Tule Canyon sends the following: "Tule Canyon mines are improving as development work goes on. The Red Jacket mine, owned by Culina & Whittaker, is looking fine; they are 115 feet deep on the ledge and are drifting from the bottom of the shaft. They have from 2 to 3 feet of ore all the way down the shaft which will mill from $30 to $40 per ton. There has been quite a number of locations made at the gold camp, about two miles south of the rich silver mines owned by Ingalls and others. Henry Jagles left here a few days ago with some rich silver ore for shipment. R. J. Whittaker has received the appointment as school trustee for Tule Canyon. Smith & Maupin are working on a lease of the Uncle Sam mine, owned by Culina & Whittaker; there has been some ore found in this mine which will go over $1,000 per ton in gold. The prospects are very favorable for this becoming a prosperous camp in the near future."

Clippings

A physician was called recently to attend Flo Stewart, a woman who attained considerable notoriety during the early stages of the Mint shortage cases. It was reported that she had taken laudanum with suicidal attempt but later developments seem to show that the poison was administered to her by another party. Investigation is apt to disclose some startling features.—Carson News.

It is estimated that there are about 17,500 head of beef cattle this side of the mountains. It is said that Shasta Valley is about cleaned up, and if California must depend upon this section for three month's beef supply, when they use about 1,200 head a day, it looks as if they would be compelled to pay a little more for them than they have been paying.—Lyon County Times.

Walter Ober of Inyo County was married last Monday evening at the Lake View House to Amelia Rey. Mr. Ober has lived most of his life in Inyo County and is well known throughout this section. The bride is also well known in this county, having resided here for many years. The happy couple left on Monday morning for Silver Peak, where they will in future reside.—Walker Lake Bulletin.

The Storm

This region was visited by a heavy storm early in the week. Snow fell to a considerable depth in the high Sierras, and the first snow of the season fell in the valley. At Independence there was not more than an inch, while at Olancha there was about two feet. The storm was general all over the Coast, snow falling at Stockton for the first time in eight years. The fruit crop in the Sacramento valley has been badly damased. The unusual cold will be an advantage here, as it will hold back the fruit till possible danger from frost has past. It is reported that the Thornton Bros. in Round Valley lost about 1,700 head of goats. They had finished shearing when the storm came and the animals fled before it, falling into a creek and drowning. The Mojave stage was delayed by the snow and at last accounts had not got through. While the sky is partly overcast with clouds the storm is apparently over.

Clippings From Blackrock

Surveyor J. Seely is at A. A. Neil's, confined to the house with a strained hip.

The late storm compelled the woodchoppers and packers to leave camp and seek shelter in the valley.

A bran new daughter made her appearance at the residence of Jas. Jenkins on Tuesday morning.

Capt. Luke Smith's good looks were temporarily spoiled by a birch pole which he was chopping flying up and coming in contact with his roman nose causing it to "roam all over his face."

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR," "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE," ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

She scarcely knew what she said. A woman who loves a man very much is not quick to take in the absolute declaration of that man's love on the instant. It is too wonderful for her. He felt his cheek flush with hers; he drew her look again to him. "Marion, Marion!" he said. That was all.

She looked at herself again.

"Oh, hush! Some one is coming," was her quick, throbbing reply. When they parted a half hour later, he said to her, "Will you give me my commission to go to Greyhope?"

"Oh, no, I cannot," she said very gravely, "but come to Greyhope—when I go back."

"And when will that be?" he said, smiling, yet a little ruefully too.

"Oh, ask Mrs. Townley," she replied. "She is coming also."

Marion knew what that commission to go to Greyhope meant. But she determined that he should see Lali first before anything irrevocable was done. She still looked upon Frank's marriage as a scandal. Well, Captain Vidall should face it in all its crudeness. So in a week or less Marion and Mrs. Townley were in Greyhope.

Two months had gone since Lali arrived in England, and yet no letter had come to her or to any of them from Frank. Frank's solicitor in London had written him fully of her arrival, and he had had a reply, with further instructions regarding money to be placed to General Armour's credit for the benefit of his wife. Lali, as she became Europeanized, also awoke to the forms and ceremonies of her new life. She had overheard Frank's father and mother wondering, and fretting as they wondered, why they had not received any word from him. General Armour had even called him a scoundrel, which sent Frank's mother into tears. Then Lali had questioned Mackenzie and Colvan, for she had increasing shrewdness, and she began to feel her actual position. She resented General Armour's imputation, but in her heart she began to pine and wonder. At times, too, she was fitful and was not to be drawn out. But she went on improving in personal appearance and manner and in learning the English language. Mrs. Townley's appearance marked a change in her. When they met, she suddenly stood still and trembled. When Mrs. Townley came to her and took her hand and kissed her, she shivered and then caught her about the shoulders lightly, but was silent. After a little she said, "Come—come to my wigwam and talk with me."

She said it with a strange little smile, for now she recognized that the word wigwam was not to be used in her new life. But Mrs. Townley whispered, "Ask Marion to come too."

Lali hesitated and then said a little maliciously, "Marion, will you come to my wigwam?"

Marion ran to her, caught her about the waist and replied gayly: "Yes, we will have a powwow. Is that right—is powwow right?"

The Indian girl shook her head with a pretty vagueness and vanished with them. General Armour walked up and down the room briskly, then turned on his wife and said: "Wife, it was a brutal thing. Frank doesn't deserve to be—the father of her child."

But Lali had moods—singular moods. She indulged in one three days after the arrival of Marion and Mrs. Townley. She had learned to ride with the side-saddle and wore her riding dress admirably. Nowhere did she show to better advantage. She had taken to riding now with General Armour on the country roads. On this day Captain Vidall was expected, he having written to ask that he might come. What trouble Lali had with one of the servants that morning was never thoroughly explained, but certain it is she came to have a crude notion of why Frank Armour married her. The servant was dismissed duly, but that was after the contretemps.

It was late afternoon. Everybody had been busy, because one or two other guests were expected besides Captain Vidall. Lali had kept to herself, sending word through Richard that she would not "be English," as she vaguely put it, that day. She had sent Mackenzie on some mission. She sat on the floor of her room as she used to sit on the ground in her father's lodge. Her head was bowed in her hands, and her arms rested on her knees. Her body swayed to and fro. Presently all motion ceased. She became perfectly still. She looked before her, as if studying something.

Her eyes emphatically flashed. She rose quickly to her feet, went to her wardrobe and took out her Indian costume and blanket, with which she could never be induced to part. Almost feverishly she took off the clothes she wore and hastily threw them from her; then she put on the buckskin clothes in which she had journeyed to England, drew down her hair as she used to wear it, fastened round her waist a long red sash which had been given her by a governor of the Hudson's Bay company when he had visited her father's country, threw her blanket round her shoulders and then eyed herself in the great mirror in the room. What she saw evidently did not please her perfectly, for she stretched out her hands and looked at them. She shook her head at herself and put her hand to her cheeks and pinched them—they were not so brown as they once were—then thrust out her foot. She drew it back quickly in disdain.

Immediately she caught the fashionable slippers from her feet and threw them among the discarded garments. She looked at herself again. Still she was not satisfied, but she threw up her arms, as with a sense of pleasure and freedom, and laughed at herself. She pushed out her moccasined foot, tapped the floor with it, nodded toward it and said a word or two in her own language. She heard some one in the next room, possibly Mackenzie. She stepped to the door leading into the hall, opened it, went out, traveled its length, ran down a back hallway out into the park toward the stables, her blanket, as her hair, flying behind her.

She entered the stables, made for a horse that she had ridden much, put a bridle on him, led him out before any one had seen her, and catching him by the mane suddenly threw herself on him at a bound, and giving him a tap with a short whip she had caught up in the stable headed him for the main avenue and the open road. Then a stableman saw her and ran after, but he might as well have tried to follow the wind. He forthwith proceeded to saddle another horse. Boulter also saw her as she passed the house, and running in told Mrs. Armour and the general. They both ran to the window and saw dashing down the avenue a picture out of Fenimore Cooper—a saddleless horse, with a rider whose fingers merely touched the bridle riding as on a journey of life and death.

"My God, it's Lali! She's mad! she's mad! She is striking that horse! It will bolt! It will kill her!" said the general.

Then he rushed for a horse to follow her. Mrs. Armour's hands clasped painfully. For an instant she had almost the same thought as had Marion on the first morning of Lali's coming, but that passed and left her gazing helplessly after the horsewoman. The flying blanket had frightened the blooded horse, and he made desperate efforts to fulfill the general's predictions.

Lali soon found that she had miscalculated. She was not riding an Indian pony, but a crazed, high strung horse. As they flew, she sitting superbly and tugging at the bridle, the party coming from the railway station entered the great gate, accompanied by Richard and Marion. In a moment they sighted this wild pair bearing down upon them with a terrible swiftness.

As Marion recognized Lali she turned pale and cried out, rising in her seat. Instinctively Captain Vidall knew who it was, though he could not guess the cause of the singular circumstance. He saw that the horse had bolted, but also that the rider seemed entirely fearless. "Why, in heaven's name," he said between his teeth, "does she not let go that blanket?"

At that moment Lali did let it go, and the horse dashed by them, making hard for the gate. "Turn the horses round and follow her!" said Vidall to the driver. While this was doing Marion caught sight of her father riding hard down the avenue. He passed them and called to them to hurry on after him.

Lali had not the slightest sense of fear, but she knew that the horse had gone mad. When they passed through the gate and swerved into the road, a less practiced rider would have been thrown. She sat like wax. The pace was incredible for a mile, and though General Armour rode well he was far behind.

Suddenly a trap appeared in the road in front of them, and the driver, seeing the runaway, set his horses at right angles to the road. It served the purpose only to provide another danger. Not far from where the trap was drawn, and between it and the runaway, was a lane which ended at a farmyard in a cul de sac. The horse swerved into it, not slacking its pace, and in the fraction of a mile came to the farmyard.

But now the fever was in Lali's blood. She did not care whether she lived or died. A high hedge formed the cul de sac. When she saw the horse slacking, she cut him savagely across the head twice with a whip and drove him at the green wall. He was of too good make to refuse it, stiff as it was. He rose to it magnificently and cleared it, but almost as he struck the ground squarely he staggered and fell, the girl beneath him. He had burst a blood vessel. The ground was soft and wet. The weight of the horse prevented her from getting free. She felt its hoof striking in its death struggle, and once her shoulder was struck. Instinctively she buried her face in the mud, and her arms covered her head.

And then she knew no more.

When she came to, she was in the carriage within the gates of Greyhope, and Marion was bending over her. She suddenly tried to lift herself, but could not. Presently she saw another face—that of General Armour. It was stern, and yet his eyes were swimming as he looked at her.

"How!" she said to him. "How!" and fainted again.

CHAPTER VI.

Lali's recovery was not rapid. A change had come upon her. With that strange ride had gone the last flicker of the desire for savage life in her. She knew now the position she held toward her husband; that he had never loved her; that she was only an instrument for unworthy retaliation. So soon as she could speak after her accident she told them that they must not write to him and tell him of it. She also made them promise that they would give him no news of her at all, save that she was well. They could not refuse to promise. They felt she had the right to demand much more than that. They had begun to care for her for herself, and when the months went by and one day there was a hush about her room and anxiety and then relief in the faces of all, they came to care for her still more for the sake of her child.

As the weeks passed the fair haired child grew more and more like his father, but if Lali thought of her husband they never knew by anything she said, for she would not speak of him. She also made them promise that they would not write to him of the child's birth. Richard, with his sense of justice and knowing how much the woman had been wronged, said that in all this she had done quite right; that Frank, if he had done his duty after marrying her, should have come with her. And because they all felt that Richard had been her best friend as well as their own they called the child after him. This also was Lali's wish. Coincident with her motherhood there came to Lali a new purpose. She had not lived with the Armours without absorbing some of their fine social sense and dignity. This, added to the native instinct of pride in her, gave her a new ambition. As hour by hour the child grew dear to her, so hour by hour her husband grew away from her. She schooled herself against him. At times she thought she hated him. She felt she could never forgive him, but she would prove to him that it was she who had made the mistake of her life in marrying him; that she had been wronged, not he, and that his sin would face him with reproach and punishment one day. Richard's prophecy was likely to come true. She would defeat very perfectly indeed Frank's intentions. After the child was born, so soon as she was able, she renewed her studies with Richard and Mrs. Armour. She read every morning for hours; she rode; she practiced all those graceful arts of the toilet belonging to the social convention; she showed an unexpected faculty for singing and practiced it faithfully, and she begged Mrs. Armour and Marion to correct her at every point where correction seemed necessary. When the chid was two years old, they all went to London, something against Lali's personal feelings, but quite in accord with what she felt her duty.

Richard was left behind at Greyhope. For the first time in 18 months he was alone with his old quiet duties and recreations. During that time he had not neglected his pensioners—his poor, sick, halt and blind—but a deeper, larger interest had come into his life in the person of Lali. During all that time she had seldom been out of his sight, never out of his influence and tutelage. His days had been full, his every hour had been given a keen responsible interest. As if by tacit consent, every incident or development of Lali's life was influenced by his judgment and decision. He had been more to her than General Armour, Mrs. Armour or Marion. Schooled as he was in all the ways of the world, he had at the same time a mind as sensitive as a woman's, an indescribable gentleness, a persuasive temperament. Since, years before, he had withdrawn from the social world and become a recluse many of his finer qualities had gone into an indulgent seclusion. He had once loved the world and the gay life of London, but some untoward event, coupled with a radical love of retirement, had sent him into years of isolation at Greyhope.

His tutelar relations with Lali had reopened many an old spring of sensation and experience. Her shy dependency, her innocent inquisitiveness, had searched out his remotest sympathies. In teaching her he had himself been retaught. Before she came he had been satisfied with the quiet usefulness and studious ease of his life, but in her presence something of his old youthfulness came back, some reflection of the ardent hopes of his young manhood. He did not notice the change in himself. He only knew that his life was very full. He read later at nights, he rose earlier in the morning, but unconsciously to himself he was undergoing a change. The more a man's sympathies and emotions are active the less is he the philosopher. It is only when one has withdrawn from the more personal influence of the emotions that one's philosophy may be trusted.

One may be interested in mankind and still be philosophical—may be, as it were, the priest and confessor to all comers. But let one be touched in some vital corner in one's nature, and the high faultless impartiality is gone. In proportion as Richard's interest in Lali had grown, the universal quality of his sympathy had declined. Man is only man. Not that his benefactions as lord bountiful in the parish had grown perfunctory, but the calm detail of his interest was not so definite. He was the same, yet not the same.

Wind and Whiskers.

I hear that certain hairy old chappies who are given to wearing their whiskers in the Vandyke style are organizing a club to be known as "The Pointed Beard club."

The object of the new organization is soup and sociability.

It is to begin its career with a bohemian dinner, from which smooth faces and "mustaches only" are to be barred, and at this dinner every member is to make a speech.

The motto of the club is most appropriate. It is "Wind and Whiskers."—Cholly Knickerbocker in New York Recorder.

The battlefield of Bull Run has been sold for less than $6 an acre. This is far below the customary quotation for historic battlefields.—Boston Herald.

NOTHING TO DIG BUT GOLD.

Wonderful Discoveries of the Yellow Ore Near Salt Lake City.

Recent discoveries of vast goldfields at Mercur, about 65 miles south of Salt Lake City, which give every indication of making that place one of the largest and richest gold mining camps in the world, have created intense excitement. For about two years only one property has been operated, and that by the Mercur Gold Mining and Milling company, and in that period it has paid dividends of over $600,000. It now appears that the valley for many miles in every direction contains ore equally as rich or richer than the Mercur company's property.

Within a short period a district of seven miles by three miles has been almost entirely taken up, and fully 1,000 miners and prospectors are at work. Three new mills have been started up and are now operating even more profitably than the original one. New discoveries are being made daily, and there is great excitement. The extent of the surface in which the ore is found appears to be practically unlimited, and the stock of numerous companies which have recently incorporated is eagerly sought for at from 50 cents to $2 a share. Captain Delamar, the multimillionaire, recently obtained an option to purchase the properties of the Mercur company for $1,500,000. The option runs until Jan. 6, and there is scarcely a doubt he will take it up.—New York Tribune.

GIVES UP THE PULPIT.

Instead of Serving the Living He Will Bury the Dead.

Following close upon the action of the Rev. Julius Feicke, who gave up preaching to enter the saloon business because the pulpit did not afford him a living, comes another New Jersey clergyman who, rather than starve, has abandoned the ministry for business.

The change this time is made by the Rev. W. R. Clark, pastor of the First Congregational church of Guttenberg, and he has gone into the undertaking business.

The church is a small one and composed of members who are not wealthy. It does not pay a regular salary, but when the Rev. Mr. Clark accepted the pastorate he says he was promised that he should not want for anything. The donations and subscriptions upon which the trustees depended to make good their promises were not forthcoming, and Mr. Clark soon found himself face to face with the problem which drove Mr. Feicke out of the ministry.

He has tendered his resignation in a letter, in which he said that during the six months he had acted as pastor of the church he had received just $28.50. This was hard enough to bear, but when certain members of the congregation began to slander him it was more than he could stand.—New York Herald.

DRAW POKER AS A CURE.

Dr. Hutchinson Encourages His Maniacs to Play the Game.

Draw poker as a cure for insanity is being tried with great success at the Western Pennsylvania Insane asylum at Dixmont. Dr. Henry A. Hutchinson, the superintendent, speaking recently of the 700 inmates under his charge, said:

"We have some famous poker games there. I must confess that I was afraid to permit its being played at first, fearing the effect on some of the patients. But instead of being injurious the game has turned out to be a perfect godsend to us.

"It is the very thing we want, and I am satisfied the end justifies the means. It seems to have a quieting effect on the most boisterous patients, who play with the skill of a Mississippi river planter.

"One is surprised at their cunning and coolness. They use chips, but do not bet millions of dollars on their hands, as one would imagine. As a general rule the bets are small."—New York World.

An Athletic Clerk of the House.

Major Alexander McDowell, the new clerk of the house of representatives, has been in turn printer, editor and soldier and is now a successful banker in Sharon, Pa. Notwithstanding his many business cares, Major McDowell is an enthusiastic student of music and possesses a tenor voice of rare power and sweetness. In his banking house in Sharon he has a private room, where he has been accustomed every day for years to hold a noonday service of song with a few of his friends and neighbors, their favorite selections being Watts' hymns. The major is also an enthusiastic tennis player and now and then plays quarter back with the local football team.

THE GIFT OF A GOOD STOMACH

Is one of the most beneficent donations vouchsafed to us by nature. How often it is grossly abused! Whether the stomach is naturally weak, or has been rendered so by imprudence in eating or drinking, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best agent for its restoration to vigor and activity. Both digestion and appetite are renewed by this fine tonic, which also overcomes constipation, biliousness, malarial, kidney and rheumatic ailments and nervousness.

"Do you think his kissing her was so much of a surprise as she says?" I do. Why, she even forgot to scream."

"The Post," San Francisco's best evening paper, leads again. It has cut the price of the daily issue to 4 c a month, or $4.50 a year. This makes it the cheapest—it has always been the best—evening paper on the coast. The greatest cut, however, is on the "Weekly Post," which has been reduced to 50 cents a year. As the "Weekly Post" hereafter will be a 12 page paper, and will contain the very best matter—mining, commercial and financial quotations, excellent stories, and all the news—it is a wonderfully low price. Indeed, the "Weekly Post" is now the cheapest paper in the country.

LIVING POSTERS.

The Newest of All New Things—In Chicago.

The newest of all new things—newer than the new woman even—is planned for the annual promenade concert of the Visiting Nurses' association to be given at the First Regiment armory in Chicago.

The living poster has never been seen either in Chicago or anywhere else. The originals to be reproduced are selections from the works of Chenet, Grasset and Lutree, Dudley Hardy and Beardsley and Rhead. The living posters will be advertised by a special poster which is being designed for the committee by an artist at the Art institute. Copies of this poster will be on sale, and those who have been favored with a view of it say it is a charming creation and almost a portrait of one of the women who will take part in the representation. This poster is under the supervision of Mrs. C. P. Abbott.

The tableaus will be exact reproductions of the original posters and will be shown in frames after the fashion of pictures. The background will be painted in and the figures will be done by a number of young women who are almost daily rehearsing in their decidedly difficult roles.

THE UNFORSEEN.

If we could only foresee, what misery might be prevented. One of the many chroniclers of events in the life of Napoleon says he lost Waterloo from a pain in his back, being unfitted thereby for personal direction of the battle. It is always the unexpected that mars the best anticipations, and thus so many business men, laboring men or women, primed for success, are taken down suddenly. Nothing comes more suddenly than an attack of lumbago to stiffen or twist the muscles of the spine and lay one up. In ten minutes, however, St. Jacobs Oil will cure the soreness and stiffness and make the back supple and strong. If Napoleon could have had this great remedy at the right time, he would have changed, perhaps, the map of the whole of Europe.

AT THE LAST.

It is thy wife. Oh, husband, let me in!
I am a-weary, and the way was hard.
The snow was deep; the way was hard to win.
I fall before thy gate against me barr'd.
Oh, let me in! It is thy weary wife,
Hitherward following with wounded feet
To find thee here and lose the pain of life.
Excepting this my bitter had no sweet
And my despair no hope when thou wert past,
Oh, love, from out my darkness to thy light.
And now for me, for me, the dawn at last!
For me the rapture of the end of night!
Downfall'n my husband's silent house before
He hears me not—then death undo the door.
—Mary Brotherton, From "Rosemary For Remembrance."

RECOVERING A RING.

Virginia asked me to take her out for a row. So I of course tucked a big red cushion under each arm and straightway went down to the boathouse, for Virginia had promised herself to me in marriage, and I perforce obeyed her always and implicitly, as is the custom in such cases.

I had been staying for some weeks with her people, who had a country house on the western shore of lake—well, the name doesn't matter. We had been together a great deal, and I had learned to read Virginia's moods from the expression of her adorable little mouth. On this particular occasion her lips were pressed tightly together, which symptom meant in my code that a storm was brewing, and so, after her ladyship had settled herself comfortably among the cushions, I, saying nothing, sculled steadily away from the shore for some minutes. And besides it was one of those gorgeous autumn afternoons that make one silent. Little will-o'-the-wisps of sunlight were dancing with the ripples on the surface of the lake. The trees on the shore, like coquettes who are conscious of having lost the full bloom of their beauty, had dressed themselves in gaudy suits of scarlet and orange, as if hoping by brilliancy of color to hide the tragedy of decay that makes autumn so infinitely pathetic. Ever and anon an adventurous trout would spring out of the water to look at the deep blue of the sky, and great golden bumblebees went buzzing over our heads in their transit across the lake in search of fresh plunder.

Watching these things, I was almost unmindful of Virginia's presence, and I started when she said sharply, "You're not very amusing this afternoon."

I smiled an answer, whereupon she immediately cleared decks for action, and said, with a fine air of irony, "If only your dear Mrs. Carruthers were here, you would soon find plenty to say. I'm sure the way you went on with her at lunch was simply disgraceful. Not that I am jealous of her. You needn't think that!"

Mrs. Carruthers was a fellow guest of mine who possessed a great many of the alluring qualities of a young widow.

"She's a horrid flirt!"

"Virgie!"

"She is, and you know it. You can't call her pretty!"

"Well, dear, I suppose I mayn't, but I have heard lots of fellows say they thought she was a brick."

"Brick or no brick, she's 40 if she's a day."

"She probably is a day, but 40—no. Shall we say 39?"

This was ingenious on my part, seeing that Virginia and I both knew that Mrs. Carruthers was not yet 26.

Virginia flushed, and looked at me with her lower lip quivering.

"George, when you are sarcastic I almost hate you."

"Dear!" said I reproachfully, accentuating the e vowel sound, to make the little word seem more caressing.

"I wish I had never met you. I hate being engaged anyway—and we seem to be always quarreling."

"It takes two to make a quarrel, Virgie, and I'm sure I'm in the best of tempers."

"That's the aggravating part of it. You sit there smiling and I can't make you angry."

To my shame be it said, I burst out laughing. The moment after I was sorry, for the tears began to gather in her eyes, and I can't bear that, and more ominous still, she was fidgeting with her engagement ring. Now this really alarmed me. As a rule, our engagement was broken and recemented once a week. Only the afternoon before we had gone through the ceremony. If it were going to happen once every day, there were elements of danger in the custom which it was desirable to avoid.

But before I had time to sue for forgiveness Virginia took off the little gold band and after a moment's hesitation flung it to the lake. And then she looked straight at me, with a brave show of defiance, although the telltale mouth let me know that she was frightened at what she had done. I was more hurt than words can say, and with a few swift strokes turned the boat's head homeward. But I couldn't bear to leave the ring behind, and I determined to dive for it. I shipped my oars and took off my coat. Virginia pretended to take no notice. Then, watching her closely, I began to untie my shoe laces. Still she pretended not to see. Then I took off my belt and shoes and placed the contents of my trousers pockets in a neat little heap in the bottom of the boat.

Virginia's eyes met mine, and she said tremulously, "What are you going to do, George?"

"Dive for the ring, Virginia."

"Can you swim?"

"No."

I couldn't resist this fib. It would have spoiled it all if I had told her that I, at Eton, had held the school championship for three years in succession.

"George, dear, can't we let the men dredge for it?"

"How should we ever remember the exact spot where it went down? No,"—this with a slight touch of melodrama—"I must take the risk. And, Virgie, if I should not—not come up, don't you know—tell them that I fell overboard."

Virginia gave vent to a scream. Not one of those staccato notes that the mention of a mouse will generally bring from women, but a genuine scream of fear.

"George, please—please don't! I am so sorry I was jealous and cross and wicked."

And the tears began to show themselves again, so, without more ado, I went to the bow and took a header. I found that the water was only about ten feet deep, but the ring was not to be seen. On coming up for breath, I found poor Virginia brandishing an oar over the side of the boat, with a view to saving my life if possible. I seized it with much show of distress and waited until I got my breath. Virginia implored me to come back into the boat, but I was obdurate. After the third dive I returned to the surface, triumphantly holding out the object of my search. I swam to the side of the boat, and taking hold of Virginia's left hand, I placed the ring on her finger. We made many vows and promises, and it was not before some minutes had expired that I began to realize that I was getting awfully cold. Clambering back into the boat with some difficulty, I pulled to the house as quickly as I could. As we came in sight of the lawn Virginia exclaimed, "Of course there's that horrid Mrs. Carruthers waiting for you."

"Horrid, did you say, Virgie?"

"Oh! I forgot, George, dear, but Mrs. Carruthers is there at any rate. What will she think? What shall I tell her?"

"We'll say I caught a crab and overbalanced myself into the water."

"But do I look as if I had been crying?"

She did unmistakably, but before I had time to answer her we arrived at the landing stage. Mrs. Carruthers greeted me with:

"Why, what on earth have you been doing?"

"Poor George fell into the water," replied Virginia, with a winning smile, "and I saved his life with an oar. Didn't I, George?"

All through dinner that evening Mrs. Carruthers chaffed me unmercifully. I bore her raillery with great fortitude, and afterward, when Virginia and I were sitting on the piazza in front of the house, we made a solemn resolution that we wouldn't break our engagement again for a whole calendar month at the very most.—Gilbert Burgess in Sketch.

Cumberland Dialect.

Farmer (loquitor)—So ye've landed at last! Well, A'se proud to see you. A'll just tell the lad to louse the horses out of the conveyance. He's deaf, but A'll soon incense him. My missus has been only very middling. She's keeping better now, but she's very useless (helpless). What a meat there is in yon field the year! When them Irish beasts come, they was as lean as paddocks, and now they're as fat as butther. It's getting sare fogged up, however; we began to ploo out a part of the field, and then rued it and gave over. Yon great saugh tree has mashed the dike. It's bad for the land when the dikes is down, the beasts carries all the management into the plantings. This cundith has got properly stopped with mud. Gif A was just to rummel (stir) it a bit with a stick it would soon hush awa'. There's a mint grawing here, A can feel it.

Tash! A'se gotten a stang from a wesp. There's a wesp 'est here. It's a strong 'un, and the beet is coming out thick. It's a very kittlesome and cankersome thing, is a wesp stang. One of Jobbie's lads, the Tom one, has got a venomed hand. He was stung by a slew worm, and his arm swelled up, so he got it charmed by an Irishman. Them from Connaught is best. They spits and breathes on the wound. A've heared tell gif an Irishman draws a ring round a tead with his finger it can't stir, and them Irish beasts is tarrible for banishing snakes. A was once just about sitting down in some spratty grass in yonder slack, when an adder cummed out and fissed at me. My word! A did run! Eels is a kind of adder.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Allen G. Thurman's Memory.

"Among men of remarkable memories I will give a prominent place to the Old Roman, Allen G. Thurman," said Lawyer Mills. "To mention a slight incident of his powers: When I was associated with him in prosecuting what is known as 'the tally sheet' cases in Ohio, I was peculiarly impressed by the greatness of Mr. Thurman, by his strength of intellect, profusion of thought and magnificent accomplishments as a lawyer. I was also greatly impressed by his fine scholarship, and I have this illustration of the accuracy of his learning: While one of the attorneys engaged in the case referred to was addressing the jury he professed to make a quotation from Shakespeare—'to make assurance doubly sure.' Mr. Thurman, with affected indignation, turned to me and said, 'I thought he used to be a schoolmaster.' I said, 'Yes.' 'Well, in that case,' he said, 'he ought to know better. Shakespeare never said that.' 'What do you mean, judge?' I asked in surprise. 'I mean,' said he, 'that Shakespeare never wrote "make assurance doubly sure." What he wrote was "make assurance double sure."' I myself had doubts as to the correctness of this criticism, but afterward verified it by examining the standard editions of Shakespeare."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Japanese Missions.

The Japanese are the happiest people in the world. I have looked into the faces of thousands of this strange little people, and scarcely one in a hundred shows lines of sin and discontent, and as I go by the temples that have been beacon lights to these simple hearts for so many centuries I say in my own heart, What a farce this missionary business! What we call civilization brings to this people all of our vices and none of our virtues. Now with all the millions that have been spent in Japan on missions I say to you, and with every regard for truth, there are not 100 actual native Christians in Japan. I believe in the Christian religion, but not for this oriental mind.—Tokyo Cor. Iowa State Register.

OUR FIGHTING SHIPS

THEY DO NOT COMPARE WITH THOSE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Admiral Bunce's Fleet Is More Formidable, However, Than England's Present Squadron Attached to the North Atlantic and West Indies Station—England's Force.

The most enthusiastic and patriotic officer can make no equitable comparison of the strength of this country and Great Britain on the ocean without it becoming apparent to the most intense opponent of naval construction that this country is scarcely in a position to assert itself to a point where war may follow. They are content to show that as at present constituted Admiral Bunce's fleet, with the Texas and Maine, is probably stronger for fighting purposes than Britain's fleet attached to the North American and West Indies stations, and that this is true for the first time in ten years.

There are any number of naval officers, however, who are of the opinion that the country has been misled into a belief that the new navy is more formidable than it is, and that reports of the fine squadron of Admiral Bunce make such men as Senator Vilas, who once proclaimed that the United States had 40 ironclads, when he had included every vessel borne on the naval rolls, disposed to rest content with the present strength of the service. Former Watchdog Holman two years ago, when opposing the annual naval appropriation bill, said that Commodore Perry had raised a fine fleet on Lake Erie in 60 days, and that if it was necessary the country could do it again in the same time.

The report of the secretary of the navy and those of his bureau chiefs all indicate that the navy has a fairly good supply of warships, but an examination shows that of the entire number there are but half a dozen which should be classed as actual fighting ships. These include three monitors, the armored cruiser New York and the battleships Texas and Maine. The cruiser type was never designed to engage in actual battle, but rather for peace purposes in foreign countries where it was necessary to show the flag. Such ships as the Columbia and Minneapolis, it is admitted, would be of the highest importance to a squadron for some purposes, but no admiral would ever think of pitting either against an armored ship of the Blake or New York type.

Assistant Secretary McAdoo had prepared a list of the ships now attached to the British fleet in North American waters, and while it is smaller than usual in number it exceeds that which Admiral Bunce will take to the West Indies next week unless the administration recalls his orders. He said that as a rule the two fleets had about balanced in the past two years, but previously the English had almost doubled the number under command of the admiral on the home station. Withdrawals last summer for service in Turkish waters had reduced it to 11 ships, but even this is twice the size of the north Atlantic squadron, exclusive of two monitors.

Great Britain's squadron, however, he expressly stated, would be no match should the two countries by any chance decide to settle the Venezuela question through the fleets on this station. While Great Britain had but one protected cruiser Admiral Bunce had three battleships, and the New York is generally regarded as efficient for fighting purposes as any second class battleship abroad. England's squadron is now divided between West Indian ports, Halifax and Bermuda, but with the cable connecting Bermuda with Halifax under control of the British government it would take but a very few days for her to mobilize the full strength at any point in the islands.

On Dec. 15 the fleet consisted of these ships: Crescent, an armored cruiser and flagship; Cordelia, Canada, Magicienne, which was seen at the naval review; Mohawk, Tartar, Buzzard, Partridge, all protected cruisers, Tourmaline and Pelican, cruisers, and the Rambler, a gunboat The Crescent is a vessel of the New York class, but not so formidable. The Canada and Magicienne are smaller cruisers, but every vessel is well armed, and most of them compare favorably with the best cruisers of the United States navy.

The fact that England maintains so strong a fleet, considering that there is little actual work or necessity for the presence of its vessels in North American waters, as there is in other parts of the world, is not surprising when it is considered that her naval stations, dockyards and fortifications within three and five days' sailing of the seaboard are more powerful and better equipped than those of this country. Mr. McAdoo remarked that he was astonished at the strength displayed by England at St. Lucia and Kingston, where she has modern masked batteries on eminences concealed by trees and sand pits, and about which from the sea there is no indication of the power behind. Both of these stations, it is asserted by army experts, are more strongly fortified than New York or San Francisco. Bermuda is the oldest of her stations and was fortified over 50 years ago. Her garrison here consists of about 500 men, and one of the best floating docks is a part of the naval station. Practically nothing is known by foreign governments of the number of guns mounted on any of these stations or the extent of the mining casemates or torpedo equipment except that they are certainly stronger than people of this country know anything of or even realize.

At the war department it was said that whether there were any serious consequences growing out of the Venezuelan affair or not, the president's message and the spirit of congress would unquestionably lead to larger appropriations in future for coast defenses. Brigadier General Craighill, chief of engineers, said that he could not enter into details as to our ability to defend the coast cities, but that the war department had not been idle in the last dozen years, even with comparative small provisions for this purpose. "You may be sure," he said, "that despite inadequate funds from congress the authorities charged with coast defenses construction have done as well as could be expected." There was not an officer, however, who was not willing to admit that a very small fleet of vessels could do a vast amount of harm to coastwise cities, but they asserted that no foreign troops could ever land on American soil.

Recently the war department has obtained some information that it has been seeking in vain for several years. All efforts to secure the nature of the defenses along the Canadian border have been defeated by announcements that army officers have been detailed for this purpose, so that when it became known that they were in Canada on such work it was necessary to at once recall them to prevent serious embarrassment. Three officers last spring and summer were separately sent on this mission and failed, but a fourth has recently returned here with complete maps, drawings and data of the actual fortifications and strength of the British. This knowledge has been stored away in the bureau of military information.

It is curious to observe the offers which come to the war department when there is a slight difference between this government and any other country. Military organizations in a number of large cities have telegraphed the secretary, placing their services at the disposal of the department and expressing a desire to take the field at once. One or two naval reserve organizations have sent similar proffers of service to the navy department, but all are treated as jokes and receive little notice.—New York Sun.

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

How It Bobbed Up at Every Turn of the St. Louis Delegation.

Anent the selection of St. Louis as a convention city the following story was told by ex-Congressman Nathan Frank of Missouri to show how absurd the 13 superstition idea is. When the idea of competing for the convention was broached, a convention was called, and it was held on the 13th of the month. At the meeting a committee was appointed to look after the details, and it numbered 13.

Then when this was noticed another man was added to the committee to take away the taint of ill luck. The fact was commented on when leaving St. Louis that the thirteenth member of the committee was assigned to berth No. 13 in the car. While driving from the depot in Washington to the Arlington it was noticed that there were 13 people in the bus.

At the hotel Mr. Frank, who made one of the speeches in favor of St. Louis, was assigned to room No. 13 by the clerk. The final blow came last Tuesday, when the first ballot was taken by the committee, who were to decide where the convention was to go. Mr. Frank groaned in spirit when 13 votes were announced for St. Louis. When the final ballot came and St. Louis won, Mr. Frank wrote "13" inside his hat and says that it is a lucky number.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

NEW PROCESS.

Invention That Will Save Much Labor In Steel Mills.

Christopher Lewis, who for 30 years has been superintendent of large steel and rolling mills throughout the country, has invented a new process which promises to revolutionize the manufacture of steel. His invention is an "accumulator," a large vessel lined with brick, in which ingots are placed after they are removed from the mold to retain the heat and draw out the gas and sulphur which so often produce ruptures in armor plate and steel rails, causing their ruin.

The invention does away with the use of soaking pits and furnaces and the labor incident thereto, thus saving thousands of dollars to the manufacturer. Mr. Lewis was the inventor of the system to handle iron and steel at rolls by machinery. He was for nine years superintendent of the rolling mills at Columbus. A patent has been applied for, and it is probable the process will be tried in the Johnson Steel works at Lorain, O.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

HIS COLORED WIFE.

An Ex-Slave Woman Becomes a Wealthy Heiress.

Judge Brentano of Chicago has rendered a decision and ordered the entry of a decree which will make Maria Evans Laurence, an ex-slave, the legal widow of Dr. Henry Laurence and a wealthy woman. She is now entitled by the order of the court to an interest in her late husband's property, which will bring her at least $50,000.

Dr. Laurence was a white man and died in 1891 at his home in Chicago. As soon as Dr. Laurence died Maria Evans, as she is known, put in a claim against his estate on the ground that she was his widow. This claim was disputed by Dr. William J. Laurence, a brother of the deceased, and 20 other heirs. The defense claimed that Maria Evans was only a servant of the doctor, but the court said the evidence of a common law marriage was too strong to controvert.

CHURCH BULLFIGHTS

ORIGINAL PLAN OF COWBOYS TO AID RELIGION.

Will Differ From the Stereotyped Spanish Fights—South Dakota the Scene of the Novelty—People Excited and a Success Anticipated.

A bull fight is not often given to raise money for a religious purpose, but such is the plan which the residents of Ziebach, Nowlin and Sterling counties, in South Dakota, have now in contemplation. The fight itself will resemble little the stereotyped affair to which the Spanish-American states and the parent country in Europe are accustomed. The idea originated with the cowboys on the Wernoch ranch, in Ziebach county, on the east bank of the Cheyenne river, and from all indications the entertainment will be a great success.

For some time the Methodists of the counties in question have been thinking of establishing a church at a central point where all the residents of the district can reach it. The country is thinly populated, not to mention the fact that only a small proportion of such population as there is takes the slightest interest in religious matters, and the difficulty of raising the necessary funds was for months an insurmountable obstacle in the way of the establishment of the house of worship.

The Wernich cowboys were not among those who felt the need of religious instruction, but they were deeply interested when the daughter of a neighboring rancher suggested the bull fight as an excellent plan for raising money. Within a week from the time the suggestion was made the outlines of the fight had been roughly sketched, and volunteers were eagerly offering themselves for a part in the festivities.

Several lively young steers were selected to play the star roles and a score of cowboys to fill the secondary parts. The religious element would not hear to the torture of the animals, and it was accordingly arranged that the fighters should be armed only with their heavy quirts or whips of hair and be permitted to resort to the use of firearms only in case of absolute necessity. As the men will all be mounted it is unlikely that any such occasion will arise, and the steers will probably enjoy the performance quite as much as the cowboys.

When an animal has been in the ring for a sufficient length of time, it will simply be lassoed and dragged aside and another brought in to take its place.

The exact date of the fight has not yet been fixed. It will probably be some time in January, weather permitting, or a few weeks later in case severe cold should make the exhibition impossible during that month. A large attendance is promised from the towns in the vicinity, and a considerable sum will undoubtedly be raised for an early start upon the new church.—New York World.

MEMPHIS HAS A HEALER.

A Colored Man Said to Cure by Touching Patients.

George Herman Jones of Memphis, colored, says that several weeks ago he saw a woman suffering from rheumatism. Something, he said, told him to cure her. He called her to him, passed his hands over her face, and the pain fled, he says. The next person he says he cured was Charles Hunt, a brick mason who was suffering from consumption. B. F. Hatcher, once suffering from entire paralysis and decay of one arm, has been made whole by Jones, it is said. Phyllis Thompson, an old negress, became so ill from rheumatism that she was compelled to use crutches. Aunt Phyllis, it is asserted, has been cured by Jones.

Jones is an ignorant fellow and attributes his power to spirits.

A committee of physicians is studying Jones' work.

COURTING BY PROXY.

And Now the Bashful Husband Won't Pay the Price Agreed On.

A remarkable case of lovemaking by proxy came up before Justice Roger of St. Paul. Casper Schmidt, a wealthy farmer living near the state fair grounds, asks that a brother farmer, August Sidenkranz, pay him $100 for securing the latter a wife.

Schmidt testified that he had entered into a regular contract with Sidenkranz, because of the latter's bashfulness, to do his courting for him and secure therefor $100. Schmidt secured his sister-in-law as the bride, and Sidenkranz was duly married to her, paying $10 down and agreeing to pay the remainder at a later day. The $90 was not forthcoming, and the suit followed.

New Use For Corncobs.

Frank Shafer brought to Lacon, Ills., the other day a sample of sirup which a number of experts pronounced genuine maple sirup. It was nothing more or less than corncob sirup, made as follows: Twelve clean cobs were put in a gallon of water and boiled until soft. Then the juice was strained off and a gallon of dark brown sugar solution added. This is boiled a little while, resulting in a fine quality of sirup, hardly distinguishable from the maple product.

A Lynching Tax.

Senator Flanagan has introduced a bill in the Virginia legislature to prevent lynching. It carries into effect in part the governor's recommendations by providing that the board of supervisors of any county or council of any city or town wherein a lynching occurs shall pay into the state treasury $2 for every 1,000 inhabitants for each lynching.

ANCIENT CITY OF SALONICA.

Chief City of One of Turkey's European Provinces.

Accompanying sketches of the White Tower and Mosque of St. Sophia, in the important city of Salonica, on the borders of Albania, a province of Turkey, may be regarded as illustrating the aspect of some chief European provinces of the Ottoman dominion. These are likely to be involved, not less seriously than those of Asia Minor, or Anatolia, with Armenian and Syria, in the general confusion and strife of different races and religious communities, and the armed intervention of foreign powers, by which the very existence of the Sultan's empire is menaced with disruption. Macedonia especially, with its population divided between Turks, Greeks and Bulgarians, occupying a large territory which intervenes between Roumelia, the proper European Turkey, and the Mussulman province of Albania, has for many years past been in a very disturbed condition. To the north of it lies the almost independent principality of Bulgaria; to the south, in Thessaly, it is approached by the kingdom of Greece.

The military forces of Bulgaria, if its ruler were enabled, by more favorable political relations with either of the great powers, Russia or Austria, to undertake such an enterprise, might possibly be sufficient to conquer a portion of Macedonia, with the facilities afforded by the geographical situation.

The whole internal policy of this unhappy empire, in default of equitable and efficient domestic rule, is to support itself, with its official agents of fiscal extortion, upon the mutual animosities of its diverse races of subjects, who are allowed to outrage, plunder and massacre each other, so long as the pashas can make up rich purses for their own private emolument, and the palace on the Bosphorus has unfailing luxury. Improved administration is no more sought and attempted than the conciliation of hostile nationalities and religious creeds.

A Fagin in Real Life.

Theodore Grant, a New York Fagin, was convicted of teaching boys to steal. He had been arrested with three of his pupils, Morris Jonkofsky, aged 9; Louis Silverbloom, 8; and Samuel Hallowitz, 13. "He stole," little Jonkofsky told Justice Hayes, "and he taught us kids to steal. We would take things out of each other's pockets. Mostly we were 'shades' and 'workers.' He did most of the 'picks' himself. I used to go up in front of a woman and knock something out of her hand, and stand so she couldn't pick it up easily. Then Grant would pick her pocket from behind. When there was a crowd we would 'shade' Grant. He did the work while we crawled around so people couldn't see."

"What have you to say for yourself?" asked the justice.

"When I was pulled by de cops dis kid had just touched a pocket, but I wasn't in de job," said Grant.

"This is Fagin and Oliver Twist in real life," said the justice. "The sentence of the court is that you be confined in the penitentiary for one year on each of the three complaints against you."

Edna Lyall's "Dream Children."

The famous English authoress, Edna Lyall, writing of her life and early literary influences and work in Ladies' Home Journal, says: "From the early days of my authorship up to the present time there has always been a story on hand, and writing has become so much a part of my life that it is difficult quite to understand what life without a vocation would be like, or how people exist without 'dream children.' They cost one much suffering, and bring many cares and anxieties; they are not what we could wish, and we are conscious of their faults. Still they are our 'dream children,' and when they cheer the dull or interest the overworked there comes a glad sense that it has all been worth while, and we are thankful that the gift was given us."

Alaska Journalism.

A newspaper is soon to be published away up on the edge of the Arctic circle, in Circle City, the new mining town of Alaska. Until now people on the Yukon have had to depend for their news on their neighbors, the nearest newspaper office being many hundred miles away. The paper is to be a weekly, and the printing plant is to be shipped shortly.

FIGHT FOR FREEDOM.

DESCRIPTION OF THE TRAIN WRECK AT EL LUGARENO, CUBA.

How the Cuban Patriots Enforce the Payment of a Tax on Cattle Bound For Havana—Mines of Dynamite Touched Off by Electricity.

Ignacio Agramonte, son of the celebrated Cuban general killed in the last war, secretary of the Nuevitas and Puerto Principe railroad, in a letter to a relative in New York describes the recent train wreck at El Lugareno, caused by insurgent dynamite.

"We left Puerto Principe on the morning of the 26th," he says. "Our train was preceded a few minutes by a locomotive, thoroughly protected with iron sheets and with a strong guard on board. This locomotive, No. 6, was in charge of Manuel de la Torre, the engineer. Our train was drawn by the locomotive Centenario, which was the newest and most perfect belonging to the company. Francisco Bejarano y Rodriguez was the engineer in charge, with N. Artila and J. Rubio as firemen. We had a mixed train—ten cattle cars, six cars of general cargo, a third, second and first class coach, and an iron car in which there were about 20 soldiers.

"Las Minas was passed and the train was approaching the station of El Lugareno. The latter is a pretty little place dotted with sugar houses and the residences of men employed on the plantation. Thick woods of oak, palms and other trees extend for some little distance along the side of the track at this point and for several miles back, forming a secure place from which to attack and a safe retreat. The advance locomotive passed the bridge known as No. 12. Our train approached and passed in safety. Suddenly we heard a rifle shot, followed almost immediately by a deafening report; the next instant we were all in a jumble. I was thrown violently against the forward end of the car. My wife and mother, who were with me, were thrown in the opposite direction. The crashing of iron and timbers, the bellowing of cattle, and the general confusion which followed cannot easily be described. We knew at once that insurgents had blown up the train and thought an attack might follow. Every one remained motionless for an instant, awaiting the expected shower of bullets, but none came.

"I rushed from our car, with difficulty managed to get to the ground, and there beheld a wreck such as I had never seen before. Rails were twisted as though they were ribbons, torn from the sleepers, and absolutely tied into dynamite knots. The locomotive had been hurled 50 feet to one side, a useless mass of iron. Of the tender nothing was left but a pile of coal, wood, chains and bars. The 12 cattle cars were smashed into kindling, the wheels were wrenched from the axles, and scattered in every direction. Cattle, dead and dying, were strewn along the road for 100 feet. From midst the tangled mass of iron which had formed the tender we extracted the two firemen. One had an arm and leg missing, with head and body badly bruised. The other was almost separated piece from piece, while our engineer was unrecognizable. His head was nearly severed from his body, and both arms were gone. The brakeman, who was in one of the cattle cars, was thrown 30 feet in the air, alighting in a lot of cattle, thus partially breaking his fall. He sustained a fracture of the skull and had one arm broken.

"As I jumped from the train I saw beneath a clump of trees a group of about 12 men armed with rifles and machetes. They looked at their work for a moment, and then at a signal from their leader disappeared in the woods. The Spanish troops in the meantime remained in the iron car, expecting the attack which did not follow. I immediately telegraphed for assistance and a wrecking train from Nuevitas to repair the track. Almost all of the cattle were killed outright or injured to such an extent that it was necessary to end their misery. Every car except the first class coach and the iron car of the soldiers was badly damaged. The third class coach was, like the cattle cars, totally demolished. The second class car was jammed into ours, and ours was perched half way up on the roof of the iron car.

"On review we found that my wife had sustained an injury in the side of the jaw, my sister was more or less bruised, and I had a sprained wrist. My mother escaped with a few scratches on the arm. Most of the passengers were pretty badly shaken up.

"Upon examination we found that the insurgents had cut a little path from the edge of the woods to the track and had there between the ties buried a dynamite torpedo, connecting it with a wire to the electric battery in their retreat. They allowed the first locomotive to pass in safety, but as soon as the second was over the torpedo they touched the button of the electric instrument, and dynamite did the rest. Every attempt to ship cattle over the road toward Havana without paying a tax to the insurgent government meets with a similar result. Troops came at once from outlying districts and started in pursuit of the insurgents, but you might as well look for needles in a haystack as try to find those men when they skip into the woods.

"So far our road has lost three engines out of a total of nine and has had any number of cars smashed into kindling wood. Until the present disaster I had no idea of the destructive force of dynamite. We escaped miraculously, but I am sure the insurgents did not know we were on board, or they would not have blown up the train. My father, General Ignacio Agramonte, gave up his life for the Cuban cause, and nearly all of our family, as you know, are in the field. Mother, Sister Herminia, my wife and myself will soon join you in the United States. We have left the old home here and are ready to do anything for Cuba libre."

INYO INDEPENDENT.

RV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY MARCH 13 ..... 1896

The opinion that no evidence exhists that Dr. Nansen has found the North Pole will be increased by the news that all efforts to get a copy of the written message which the explorer is said to have sent to Irkutst have failed. The first report of Nansen's alleged discovery was sent from that point by a Russian news agent. It took the form of a brief and vague summary of the text said to be in hand. This of itself was a suspicious circumstance, for such a letter from Nansen was news to be telegraphed in full Since then the New York Herald's St. Petersburg correspondent has wired Irkutsk repeatedly for further light and has had no response of any kind. No answer was vouchsafed, even, to the inquiry whether there were grounds for sending an expedition to the point where word from Nansen was said to have reached the Siberian mainland. When these circumstances are compared with the fact that the explorer's wife has had no word from him, the inference is strong that the Irkutsk press agent is either given to fakes himself or has been deceived by some one who has chosen to vary the monotony of the arctic night by playing a practical joke on the newsmonger.

When the Cuban resolutions were presented in the House of Representatives last week their reading was frequently interrupted by loud applause on the floor and in the galleries. But for the objection of Boutelle the resolutions, which were made the special order for Tuesday, might have passed at once without debate. There was much excitement for a time and the majority were in favor of immediate action. Boutelle favored careful consideration in a matter that might plunge the country ifnto a war with Spain. He was interrupted with cries of "That's what we want," from different parts of the house. When a large number of people want anything, and want it real bad, they are likely to get it. If Congress intends to to take a step that will put an end to the present peaceful relations existing between this country and Spain it will not be difficult to do it, for both houses are one in the matter But, then, the Cuban insurgants deserve recognition as belligerents any way, and it should be granted.

At last, after five years of correspondence and petitioning and requestion, a little attention is to be paid at Washington to the needs of the national parks in California. The Secretary has sent to Congress a list of estimates of the amounts to be expended for improving National parks during the next fiscal year. The amount recommended for this State are $6,300 for Yosemite, $6,300 for Sequoia and $2,500 for General Grant. The sums are not large—particularly for Yosemite and Sequoia parks—but it will do much, if properly expended, to make many portions of these permanent national reservations accessible. Their wonders and magnificent scenery are now hidden from thousands who would visit them if possible to do so with only a slight degree of comfort; therefore, these small appropriations recommended are hailed as the commencement of a policy to open up our parks for the benefit of the people in whose interest they were formed.

The contract to supply locomotives with crude-oil fuel which the Los Angeles Oil Exchange has made with an Arizona railroad is the second deal of the kind which has followed the discovery of petroleum wells in the southern metropolis. For months past the Santa Fe lines in California have used crude oil in their locomotive furnaces, and the results have been to save 25 per cent of the former costs of coal. Indeed, the use of oil in the production of motive power has so generally increased in the south that the visits of coal-laden vessels there, which lately cut a great figure in the business of San Diego and San Pedro, have become few and far between. It is not unusual to see one such ship now where there were formerly five.

The Supreme Court appears to exhist for the purpose of knocking out laws which are intended to purify politics or to mend morals. It has a nose for unconstitutionality; no matter how well-intentioned a law may be, the Court is sure to find in it some flaw, which makes it void. One of the best meant statutes of the last Legoslature was the Act regulating primary elections; if it could have been put in force, it would have largely deminished the control of nominations by party bosses; but the Court says it is special legislation, and therefore unconstitutional. It seems odd, that, with all our cleverness, we cannot frame laws that will stand the test of an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. R. H. McDonald, who wrecked the Pacific Bank and the People's Home Saving Bank, is said to be upon the verge of liberty, free from all charges of wrong-doing. If this man is innocent, it is infamous that he has been locked up for the last three years; if he is guilty, it is infamous that it should have been impossible to convict him. Yet the fact remains that he has not been convicted though he has been inadequately punished. Evidently there is something the matter with the law, though the Code Commissioners say that there is not.—S. F., Town Talk

By the ues of the Meyers voting machines in New York state, the cost of elections has been reduced 75 per cent, while a great saving in time is effected and there is absolutely no opportunity for fraud. It is to be hoped the next Legislature of this State will investigate this matter and see if the machines cannot be profitably introduced here.

DAIRY AND CREAMERY.

TWIN SISTERS.

See This Pair of Beautiful British Guernsey Heifers.

Almost in London itself, only four miles from Regent's park, one of the best milk supply companies of that city, the Express Dairy company, has its farm. During the public health congress in London the Express Dairy company gave a fete to the delegates to show what a fine farm it had. The buildings had been constructed on the most improved hygienic principles, and the delegates to the congress could not sufficiently admire them and the exquisite cleanliness that reigned everywhere. There were brave doings at the picnic, among them a maypole dance and a harvest home procession. Upon a floral car at the head of the march sat the queen of the harvest and her maidens.

TWIN GUERNSEYS.

It was a great day for the delegates to the health congress and a greater day yet for the dairy company, since it was advertised the world over, and deserved to be, for its skill and cleanliness. Now, if some great American dairy or creamery company, for instance, a mammoth cheese or butter factory or a milk condensery, wishes to make itself known, it could not do better than to organize such a party in warm weather. Blooded cattle, green pastures, sanitary buildings and shining clean rooms and machinery make an impression in favor of cream and butter that can never be effaced.

The cows at the Express Dairy company are of various breeds, but mostly Guernseys. Among all the cattle the visitors admired none more than the pair of Guernsey heifers represented in the picture. The Guernsey cattle on this farm are many of them noted prize winners in England. Why cannot we have dairy companies like this in America, where the company not only sells milk and butter, but makes the butter from the milk of its own beautiful and well kept blooded cows? It would certainly pay.

To Begin Winter Dairying.

Have about two-thirds of the cows come fresh in the fall and fore part of the winter and the balance in the spring. This will insure an even supply of butter, which will hold your customers. Strippers' milk will always make butter lacking in flavor and is often the cause of the trouble in churning, frothing of the cream, etc., that is complained of. Cows coming fresh in the fall, if they are rightly fed and cared for during the whole year, will produce more butter than if they come in in the spring. Besides, the price being higher in winter, there is more clear profit in fall cows than in spring cows. But to keep up the supply and flavor it is necessary to have some coming fresh at different times along through the year.

I am aware that it takes time to bring about this change unless you can buy cows now that are fresh. I would advise that if you have any heifers that have not yet been bred to breed them immediately or as soon as possible, so they will have their first calves next fall. There will be no trouble afterward in having them calve in the fall. I would let some of the older cows that calve next spring go over till next November before breeding them, so as to have them fresh the September following. It may be that if you have some cows in early, say in February, you can breed them so as to come in in the January following, and the year after still earlier. By following this plan one can in two or three years at most get a herd of cows around just right as to time of coming in.—Exchange.

Butter Cows.

Let the dairyman follow this course: 1. An A No. 1 bull. 2. Fall calves. 3. Weighing and testing, raise your heifers from the best cows. 4. Gentleness and kindness in handling all your stock. 5. Feed calves and heifers well, but do not have them fat, and have them to calve at about 2 years old. By so doing he will soon have a herd of cattle that it will be hard to beat, especially if he chooses the blacks and whites, where nearly every heifer turns out a good milker.

In selection by milk signs may be included: 1. The milk form, which may be described as a wedge shape—that is, shoulders thin, forward legs comparatively close together, quarter without much flesh. 2. Good, large udder. 3. Large and crooked milk veins. 4. Escutcheon. 5. Openness between the spinal processes. 6. Oiliness and depth of color. 7. Tail reaching to hock. 8. Good, mellow, loose skin. 9. Large openings of the milk veins into the body. 10. Fine head.

As evidence of richness and quality of milk I only mention these signs as a help to those who are about buying, as I would rather have them than not, but the only true tests are the scales and Babcock or other tester. Both quantity and quality are influenced by feed. In the selection and breeding of butter cows the character of ancestry should be carefully studied as regards quality and quantity of milk, and also the economy of its production.—Exchange.

New York city consumes nearly 90,000,000 pounds of butter a year, saying nothing of oleomargarine.

Spelt is not an ancient grain. There is no Sanskrit name for it. Neither the Indians, Chinese nor Persians knew anything of it.

Dahlonega, Ga., was so called from an Indian word meaning yellow wampum or gold. Gold was found in the neighborhood.

Tusks of the mammoth have been found of a length of 9 feet, measured along the curve.

USE OF OILMEAL.

How to Feed It Properly to Farm Animals.

A few years ago I concluded to try an experiment with oilmeal. Inquiry proved the fact that no one kept it for sale except in very small quantities and at prohibitive prices. It seemed to be regarded as a tonic by my neighbors and the druggist. After considerable writing I obtained an offer of a carload at wholesale rates. I spent a day among the neighbors, sold most of it at a low price and still made a profit. It was fed to all kinds of stock and gave general satisfaction. I had sale for four carloads that winter. One horse owned by a livryman died, it was said, from feeding the meal, but nearly every one believed that a severe kicking by the owner had more to do with it. The feed stores were soon supplied with it and sold it at a reasonable price. It cut into their sales, and they soon saw their way to keep it.

Much had been used in this section until other feed got so low and the trust raised the price of the meal so high that few thought it profitable to use it. This season one may again use it to advantage in connection with other foods. It should be a dry, fine, sweet smelling and tasting meal, free from hard, gritty lumps, to be in the best condition for feeding. I fed it to horses mixed with coarse wheat bran; to cows with cottonseed meal, bran, buckwheat middlings and oats; to hens mixed with coarse wheat bran; to hogs in the milk. I do not think that it is loosening in its effects. The old fashioned linseed meal was a moist, brown substance and contained so much oil that it was equal to a dose of physic. The modern meal contains but very little oil and is a cooked, dried article. It can be used as a food instead of as a medicine. A few animals, with weak stomachs, cannot stand a heavy ration of oilmeal. Some cannot stand grain of any kind. A small portion should be mixed with other grains until the animals become accustomed to it. Then increase gradually until a full ration is reached. My work team weigh 1,100 pounds each. They are in the harness every day and work hard. For 18 months the only grain they received was ten quarts by measure per day of a mixture made of one part oilmeal and two parts coarse wheat bran. They kept in good condition, had sleek coats and seemed strong and healthy, with plenty of life. A horse will not be troubled with worms that eats a little of it each day. Our horses will get nothing else this winter, as oats are high and the meal lower. Several men who are keeping large liveries tell me that they cannot afford oats and have used oilmeal several winters.

Fed to cows it affects the butter, making it softer. Cotton seed tends to make it harder. With the two combined there is no perceptible difference. An animal will fatten much faster if fed oilmeal and roots with its cornmeal. A pail one-third full of boiling water will cook a quart of the meal, which will become a thick jelly. To this add coarse wheat bran until dry and crumbly. This is the morning feed the year round. The meal takes largely the place of meat and milk. We have a large number of hogs and pigs and but little milk to feed them. Oilmeal forms a part of their daily ration. Little pigs 2 months old soon show its effect in their sleek condition and shiny hair. One cannot prove it, but I think that the sows give richer, and I know more, milk when fed upon it. According to the chemist, it is worth more than two-thirds of its cost as a fertilizer after passing through the animals. Other things being equal, the farmer should try to feed those foods which have a high manurial value. In any neighborhood where it is not kept by the dealers in feed some farmer can benefit his neighbors and make considerable cash this winter by taking orders and buying by the carload.—C. E. Chapman in Rural New Yorker.

Boring an Editor.

"Are there no times," said a man, entering the office of a busy editor, "when you can write better than at other times?"

"Yes."

"Ah, I thought so! That men who write must consult their condition I have no doubt. Now, tell me, when can you write best?"

"When I am alone," the editor replied.—London Tit-Bits

DIED.

WALKER—At Olancha, Cal., March 12, 1896, Miss Theresa Ella Walker, a native of Morristown, Cal., aged 24 years 2 months and 21 days.

Tuesday evening March 17, grand ball.

Mrs. B. Rhine will arrive on to-day's train.

R U going to the dance next Tuesday evening? *

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Mack will arrive on to-day's train.

Ben H. Yandell Esq. returned to Bishop last Saturday.

John McSweeny shipped a car load of hay to Keeler this week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz will arrive home on to-day's train.

Manuel Diaz came up from Lone Pine last Tuesday and spent the day in town.

Lew Schalton came down from Big Pine last Wednesday and returned the next day.

W. F. Matlack arrived home last Monday evening from a visit to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

There is not very much hay on hand in this vicinity, and the price is said to be $5 per ton, delivered.

On March 2nd the United States Supreme Court decided the Stanford case in favor of Mrs. Stanford.

Louis Schabbell and his brother Fred, went to Keeler last Wednesday with a six-horse-load of baled hay.

Mazourka Canyon is still holding its own. Over five hundred dollars has been brought in this month.

The opening of spring has caused the usual improvements to move forward on the farms in this vicinity.

With good music and a large crowd you will be sure to have a good time at the St Patrick ball on the evening of the 17th. *

A number of gentlemen connected with the Hirsh mine will arrive on to-day's train to inspect the new mill and the mine.

Dan McSweeny, a brother of John and Mike McSweeny of this place, arrived from Sacramento, and is visiting with relatives here.

Among the number who have been on the sick list the past week are: Miss Mary Mulholland, Mr. A. N. Bell, Mr. J. R. Moffett and Mr. A. V. Lewis.

Geo. Thorpe, M. Laprairie and Harry Cook left last Thursday morning for Saline Valley. They took a wagon load of supplies and will spend some time prospecting.

While driving out to the Fort last Monday evening Dr. Woodin had his buggy come apart. With the use of straps and ropes he was able to patch it up and ride back to town.

Photographs.

Taking pleasure to inform the people in Independence that I am ready to take photographs. My photo tent is located at Mr. Bunney's residence; any one wishing photo work would please call immediately and have the sittings. I will remain here only until Thursday, March 19th. Prices to suit the times.

Obituary.

Theresa E. Walker died at her home at Olancha yesterday after an illness of three weeks, her death being caused by complication of pleurisy and inflammatory rheumatism. Her remains were brought to Independence for interment, the funeral taking place this afternoon at two o'clock. The deceased was a young lady of the most estimable character and the news of her death was received here, where she was well known and had many friends, with deep sorrow. When the aged pass away, while we mourn their loss, we are in a measure resigned to the inevitable lot of human life. But when a young person, in the full bloom of youth, is suddenly cut down the blow comes with crushing force from the unexpectedness of it. The bereaved family has the sincere sympathy of all.

The Races.

There will be some good sport at Independence next Tuesday and Wednesday. Sam Spratt and Fred Crocker will bring Midnight from Big Pine and there will be several more horses from there. Fish Springs will be represented by Snip, a speedy horse that has never yet been beaten, and Little Billy, Quoins and Frank will do the honors for Independence. Lone Pine will be represented by a mare of which little is known, but she is said to be very swift. The track is in better condition than ever before. There will be a large number of visitors in town and extensive preparations are being made to entertain them all. The half-mile and repeat race will be the best event of the kind had in the County for many years, and betting is sure to be lively.

An Important Suit

The U. S. District Atorney has filed a complaint in the U. S. District Court on the part of the Government in a suit involving the land on which the town of Wadsworth, Nevada is situated and the west end of Pyramid Lake reservation. The suit is against the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, Metropolitan Trust Company of New York, Pacific Lumber & Flume Company of Nevada, Pacific Improvement Company, and over sixty individual defendants living in and about Wadsworth. The complaint alleges that the land taken by the Central Pacific Company and sold or leased to the other defendants was not their property, but belonged to Wm. T. and Alexander O'Neil, Isaac Livo and O. Wemer. The suit involves half a million dollars.

Annual Report

The annual report of the Southern Pacific Co., for the year ending June 30, '95, shows that the capital stock is 1,500,000 shares, par value $100 each. The total amount issued and outstanding is $120,034,170, of which $1,000,000 is represented by shares issued for cash, the balance having been given for stock of railway companies. The income account for the Atlantic and Pacific systems of the Southern Pacific shows gross earning from operation, $35,847,810.56; operating expenses, $23,797,596.24. The total gross earnings from operation are stated at $31,245,143.89, made up as follows: Total freight earnings, $19,187,454.08; total passanger earnings, $11,021,129.62; total other earnings, $1,036,516.19.

Weather Bureau Closed.

Mr. H. E. Wilkinson, the Observer of the Weather Bureau here, received a telegram the first of the week, from official headquarters, directing him to close the office here and ship the material to Sacramento. Mr. Wilkinson says no reason was given for the closing of the office, and he does not think the closing of the telegraph line was altogether the cause of the office being closed, although such might be the fact. The office has been here for about two years and was fixed up in excellent shape, and the closing will be a loss to the town. Mr. Wilkinson will remain here untilhe receive further orders, which he expects in a few days.

Chino Ranch.

Easton, Eldridge & Co., of San Francisco, have an option on 40,000 acres of Chino ranch, which if they negotiate, is to go for $1,600,000. The contract expires March 26, 1896. The property included is the entire Chino ranch except 320 acres of townsite, and 1,000 acres to be selected. It also covers the Chino Valley Railroad, all water rights and everything appertaining to the property. The terms of sale, if made, is one-fourth of the purchase price in cash, the balance in three equal annual installments, at 7 per cent interest.

Panama Canal.

Reports recently in circulation to the effect that the Nicaragua and Panama canal companies were about to consolidate their interests, are denied. It appears that the French owners of the Panama canal scheme have not yet given up their plan by any means. They have recently resumed active operations, and at last accounts 4,800 men were employed on the Isthmus.

Gold And Silver Mallet.

The Chicago Daily News says: The gavel to be used at the St. Louis Convention is now in possession of the National Republican Committee. Its maker, a man from Carthage, Ill., was in the city to-day receiving congratulations upon the happy inspiration which led him to place on one end of the mallet, made from wood of Lincoln's log cabin, a gold band, and on the other end a silver one.

The Carson Mint.

The latest news in regard to the Carson Mint, is that the Mint will not be abolished. Director of the Mint Preston and the Treasury officials before the committee on appropriations gave it as their opinion that the Mint was a needless expense to the Government, but Congressman Newlands induced the committee to recommend the usual appropriations to run it another year.

Clippings.

Lyon County Times:—The case of Johnny Jones is holding the attention of the Carson public this week. The testimony, so far, has been about the same as that introduced in the Heney case. There have been no startling exposures or sensations yet, but there possibly will be before the end of the trial. The jury is in charge of officers of the Court.

The large and handsome two-story hotel and ballroom, with stables, etc., owned by Mr. Barnett, and which comprised about all there was of Coleville, Antelope Valley, was entirely destroyed by fire on Friday afternoon, of last week. The occupants barely escaped with the clothes on their back. How the fire originated is not known. The loss estimated at $15,000 with $6,000 insurance.

Bodie Miner:—We venture to prophesy that within the next two years there will be more men employed in Bodie Mining District than for any one year for the past five years. This district has valuable mining property awaiting development and our greatest mining boom is yet to come. Those located in business here are very fortunate and have a chance yet to make snug fortunes in this "played out" camp. Just wait till we get more eletric power and Bodie will begin to remind you again of the palmy days.

The different mining companies distributed about $14,000 among the Bodie people on Thursday.

Religious Services.

The order of services on the Independence charge until further notice will be as follows: Independence—Service every Sunday evening to commence at 7 o'clock Services every fourth Sunday in the morning to commence at 11 o'clock. Mr. H. E. Wilkinson will conduct the evening services the fourth Sunday of each month Sunday school every Sunday at 2 o'clock Mr. H. E. Wilkinson supt. Prayer meeting every Wednesday at 6:30 p. m. # THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE

By GILBERT PARKER.

[Copyright, 1893, by the J. B. Lippincott Co.]

He was not aware of any difference in himself. He did not know that he looked younger by 10 years. Such is the effect of mere personal sympathy upon a man's look and bearing. When, therefore, one bright May morning the family at Greyhope, himself excluded, was ready to start for London, he had no thought but that he would drop back into his old silent life as it was before Lali came and his brother's child was born. He was not conscious that he was very restless that morning. He scarcely was aware that he had got up two hours earlier than usual. At the breakfast table he was cheerful and alert. After breakfast he amused himself in playing with the child till the carriage was brought round. It was such a morning as does not come a dozen times a year in England. The sweet moist air blew from the meadows and up through the lime trees with a warm insinuating gladness. The lawn sloped delightfully away to the flowered embrasures of the park, and a fragrant abundance of flowers met the eye and cheered the senses. While Richard loitered on the steps with the child and its nurse, more excited than he knew, Lali came out and stood beside him. At the moment Richard was looking into the distance. He did not hear her when she came. She stood near him for a moment and did not speak. Her eyes followed the direction of his look and idled tenderly with the prospect before her. She did not even notice the child. The same thought was in the mind of both—with a difference. Richard was wondering how any one could choose to change the sweet dignity of that rural life for the flaring, hurried delights of London and the season. He had thought this a thousand times, and yet, though he would have been little willing to acknowledge it, his conviction was not so impregnable as it had been.

Mrs. Francis Armour was stepping from the known to the unknown. She was leaving the precincts of a life in which, socially, she had been born again. Its sweetness and benign quietness had all worked upon her nature and origin to change her. In that it was an outdoor life, full of freshness and open air vigor, it was not antagonistic to her past. Upon this sympathetic basis had been imposed the conditions of a fine social decorum. The conditions must still exist. But how would it be when she was withdrawn from this peaceful activity of nature and set down among "those garish lights" in Cavendish square and Piccadilly? She hardly knew to what she was going as yet. There had been a few social functions at Greyhope since she had come, but that could give her, after all, but little idea of the swing and pressure of London life.

At this moment she was lingering over the scene before her. She was wondering with the naive wonder of an awakened mind. She had intended many times of late saying to Richard all the native gratitude she felt, yet somehow she had never been able to say it. The moment of parting had come.

"What are you thinking of, Richard?" she said now.

He started and turned toward her. "I hardly know," he answered. "My thoughts were drifting."

"Richard," she said abruptly, "I want to thank you."

"Thank me for what, Lali?" he questioned.

"To thank you, Richard, for everything since I came, over three years ago."

He broke out into a soft little laugh then, with his old good natured manner, caught her hand as he did the first night she came to Greyhope, patted it in a fatherly fashion and said: "It is the wrong way about, Lali. I ought to be thanking you; not you me. Why, look, what a stupid old fogy I was then, toddling about the place with too much time on my hands, reading a lot and forgetting everything, and here you came in, gave me something to do, made the little I know of any use and ran a pretty gold wire down the rusty fiddle of life. If there are any speeches of gratitude to be made, they are mine—they are mine."

"Richard," she said very quietly and gravely, "I owe you more than I can ever say—in English. You have taught me to speak in your tongue enough for all the usual things of life, but one can only speak from the depths of one's heart in one's native tongue. And see," she added, with a painful little smile, "how strange it would sound if I were to tell you all I thought in the language of my people—of my people whom I shall never see again. Richard, can you understand what it must be to have a father whom one is never likely to see again—whom if one did see again something painful would happen? We grow away from people against our will; we feel the same toward them, but they cannot feel the same toward us, for their world is in another hemisphere. We want to love them, and we love, remember and are glad to meet them again, but they feel that we are unfamiliar, and because we have grown different outwardly they seem to miss some chord that used to ring. Richard, I—I"— She paused.

"Yes, Lali," he assented, "yes, I understand you so far, but speak out."

"I am not happy," she said. "I never shall be happy. I have my child, and that is all I have. I cannot go back to the life in which I was born. I must go on as I am, a stranger among a strange people, pitied, suffered, cared for a little—and that is all."

The nurse had drawn away a little distance with the child. The rest of the family were making their preparations inside the house. There was no one near to watch the singular little drama.

"You should not say that," he added. "We all feel you to be one of us."

"But all your world does not feel me to be one of them," she rejoined.

"We shall see about that when you go up to town. You are a bit morbid, Lali. I don't wonder at your feeling a little shy, but then you will simply carry things before you. Now you take my word for it, for I know London pretty well."

She held out her ungloved hands. "Do they compare with the white hands of the ladies you know?" she said.

"They are about the finest hands I have ever seen," he replied. "You can't see yourself, sister of mine."

"I do not care very much to see myself," she said. "If I had not a maid, I expect I should look very shiftless, for I don't care to look in a mirror. My only mirror used to be a stream of water in summer," she added, "and a corner of a looking glass got from the Hudson's Bay fort in the winter."

"Well, you are missing a lot of enjoyment," he said, "if you do not use your mirror much. The rest of us can appreciate what you would see there."

She reached out and touched his arm. "Do you like to look at me?" she questioned, with a strange simple candor. For the first time in many a year Richard Armour blushed like a girl fresh from school. The question had come so suddenly, it had gone so quickly into a sensitive corner of his nature, that he lost command of himself for the instant, yet had little idea why the command was lost. He touched the fingers on his arm affectionately.

"Like to look at you? Like to look at you? Why, of course, we all like to look at you. You are very fine and handsome—and interesting."

"Richard," she said, drawing her hands away, "is that why you like to look at me?"

He had recovered himself. He laughed in his old hearty way and said: "Yes, yes. Why, of course. Come, let us go and see the boy," he added, taking her arm and hurrying her down the steps. "Come and let us see Richard Joseph, the pride of all the Armours."

She moved beside him in a kind of dream. She had learned much since she came to Greyhope, but yet she could not at that moment have told exactly why she asked Richard the question that had confused him, nor did she know quite what lay behind the question. But every problem which has life works itself out to its appointed end if fumbling human fingers do not meddle with it. Half the miseries of this world are caused by forcing issues, in every problem of the affections, the emotions and the soul. There is a law working with which there should be no tampering, lest in foolish interruption come only confusion and disaster. Against every such question there should be written the one word, wait.

Richard Armour stooped over the child. "A beauty," he said, "a perfect little gentleman. Like Richard Joseph Armour there is none," he added.

"Whom do you think he looks like, Richard?" she asked. This was a question she had never asked before since the child was born. Whom the child looked like every one knew, but within the past year and a half Francis Armour's name had seldom been mentioned and never in connection with the child. The child's mother asked the question with a strange quietness. Richard answered it without hesitation.

"The child looks like Frank," he said. "As like him as can be."

"I am glad," she said, "for all your sakes."

"You are very deep this morning, Lali," Richard said, with a kind of helplessness. "Frank will be pretty proud of the youngster when he comes back. But he won't be prouder of him than I am."

"I know that," she said. "Won't you be lonely without the boy—and me, Richard?"

Again the question went home. "Lonely? I should think I would," he said. "I should think I would. But then, you see, school is over, and the master stays behind and makes up the marks. You will find London a jollier master than I am, Lali. There'll be lots of shows, and plenty to do, and smart frocks, and no end of feeds and frolics, and that is more amusing than studying three hours a day with a dry old stick like Dick Armour. I tell you what, when Frank comes"——

She interrupted him. "Do not speak of that," she said. Then, with a sudden burst of feeling, though her words were scarcely audible: "I owe you everything, Richard—everything that is good. I owe him nothing, Richard—nothing but what is bitter."

"Hush, hush," he said. "You must not speak that way. Lali, I want to say to you"——

At that moment General Armour, Mrs. Armour and Marion appeared on the doorstep, and the carriage came wheeling up the drive. What Richard intended to say was left unsaid. The chances were it never would be said.

"Well, well," said General Armour, calling down at them, "escort his imperial highness to the chariot which awaits him, and then, ho! for London town. Come along, my daughter," he said to Lali. "Come up here and take the last whiff of Greyhope that you will have for six months. Dear, dear, what lunatics we all are, to be sure! Why, we're as happy as little birds in their nests out in the decent country, and yet we scamper off to a smoky old city by the Thames to rush along with the world, instead of sitting high and far away from it and watching it go by. God bless my soul, I'm old enough to know better. Well, let me help you in, my dear," he added to his wife, "and in you go, Marion, and in you go, your imperial highness"—he passed the child awkwardly in to Marion—"and in you go, my daughter," he added as he handed Lali in, pressing her hand with a brusque fatherliness as he did so. He then got in after them.

Richard came to the side of the carriage and bade them all goodby one by one. Lali gave him her hand, but did not speak a word. He called a cheerful adieu, the horses were whipped up, and in a moment Richard was left alone on the steps of the house. He stood for a time looking, then he turned to go into the house, but changed his mind, sat down, lit a cigar and did not move from his seat until he was summoned to his lonely luncheon.

Nobody thought much of leaving Richard behind at Greyhope. It seemed the natural thing to do. But still he had not been left alone—entirely alone—for three years or more.

The days and weeks went on. If Richard had been accounted eccentric before, there was far greater cause for the term now. Life dragged. Too much had been taken out of his life all at once, for in the first place the family had been drawn together more during the trouble which Lali's advent had brought. Then the child and its mother, his pupil, were gone also. He wandered about in a kind of vague unrest. The hardest thing in this world to get used to is the absence of a familiar footstep and the cheerful greeting of a familiar eye. And the man with no chick or child feels even the absence of his dog from the hearth rug when he returns from a journey or his day's work. It gives him a sense of strangeness and loss. But when it is the voice of a woman and the hand of a child that is missed you can back no speculation upon that man's mood or mind or conduct. There is no influence like the influence of habit, and that is how, when the minds of people are at one, physical distance and differences, no matter how great, are invisible or at least not obvious.

Richard Armour was a sensible man, but when one morning he suddenly packed a portmanteau and went up to town to Cavendish square the act might be considered from two sides of the equation. If he came back to enter again into the social life which for so many years he had abjured, it was not very sensible, because the world never welcomes its deserters. It might if men and women grew younger instead of older. If he came to see his family, or because he hungered for his godchild, or because—but we are hurrying the situation. It were wiser not to state the problem yet. The afternoon that he arrived at Cavendish square all his family were out except his brother's wife. Lali was in the drawing room receiving a visitor who had asked for Mrs. Armour and Mrs. Francis Armour. The visitor was received by Mrs. Francis Armour. The visitor knew that Mrs. Armour was not at home. She had by chance seen her and Marion in Bond street and was not seen by them. She straightway got into her carriage and drove up to Cavendish square, hoping to find Mrs. Francis Armour at home. There had been house parties at Greyhope since Lali had come there to live, but this visitor, though once an intimate friend of the family, had never been a guest.

The visitor was Lady Haldwell, once Miss Julia Sherwood, who had made possible what was called Francis Armour's tragedy. Since Lali had come to town Lady Haldwell had seen her, but had never met her. She was not at heart wicked, but there are few women who can resist an opportunity of anatomizing and reckoning up the merits and demerits of a woman who has married an old lover. When that woman is in the position of Mrs. Francis Armour the situation has an unusual piquancy and interest. Hence Lady Haldwell's journey of inquisition to Cavendish square.

As Richard passed the drawing room door to ascend the stairs he recognized the voices.

Once a sort of heathen as Mrs. Francis Armour had been, she still could grasp the situation with considerable clearness. There is nothing keener than one woman's instinct regarding another woman where a man is concerned. Mrs. Francis Armour received Lady Haldwell with a quiet stateliness which, if it did not astonish her, gave her sufficient warning that matters were not in this little comedy to be all her own way.

Thrown upon the mere resources of wit and language, Mrs. Francis Armour must have been at a disadvantage, for Lady Haldwell had a good gift of speech, a pretty talent for epithet and no unnecessary tenderness. She bore Lali no malice. She was too decorous and high for that. In her mind the wife of the man she had discarded was a mere commonplace catastrophe, to be viewed without horror, maybe with pity. She had heard the alien spoken well of by some people. Others had seemed indignant that the Armours should try to push "a red woman" into English society. Truth is the Armours did not try at all to push her. For over three years they had let society talk. They had not entertained largely in Cavendish square since Lali came, and those invited to Greyhope had a chance to refuse the invitations if they choose. Most people did not choose to decline them. But Lady Haldwell was not of that number. She had never been invited. But now in town, when entertainment must be more general, she and the Armours were prepared for social interchange.

Behind Lady Haldwell's visit curiosity chiefly ran. She was in a way sorry for Frank Armour, for she had been fond of him after a fashion, always fonder of him than of Lord Haldwell. She had married with her fingers holding the scales of advantage, and Lord Haldwell dressed well, was immensely rich, and the title had a charm.

When Mrs. Francis Armour met her with her strange, impressive dignity, she was the slightest bit confused, but not outwardly. She had not expected it. At first Lali did not know who her visitor was. She had not caught the name distinctly from the servant.

Presently Lady Haldwell said, as Lali gave her hand: "I am Lady Haldwell. As Miss Sherwood I was an old friend of your husband."

Room In It Still.

Woman suffrage is finding favor with state legislatures, and the time seems to be not far distant when it will be conceded in every direction. What with voting and bicycling, lovely woman's mind will be so occupied that her cup of happiness should be full to overflowing.—Boston Herald.

IN SNOWBOUND STATES.

In states and territories where snow and ice last all the long winters through, where men are much exposed and suffer much from cold, it is a wonder they do not provide better against some of the consequences. In some lumber camps, choppers stand all day in knee-deep snow with half frozen feet. The feet are much more tender than the hands from being covered up all the time. Men are often lame all summer from the frost-bites of the previous winter. Why it is so, is simply because they do not know that St. Jacobs Oil will cure frost-bite in a night.

A DYING SPARK.

STOP RIGHT NOW! DON'T LIGHT ANOTHER! YOU'RE BURNING YOUR BRAINS.

Wrecks Along the Street-Side.

Oft-times tobacco's victims look at the dying spark in the cigar stump, or at the big masticated "chaw" of tobacco just expectorated, and with nerves nicotinized with tobacco, mentally resolve, "Now, that is my last, I will never use it again. I know that it is injuring me physically and financially and my nerves are becoming so irritated that I can't stand the least annoyance." What is the result? These good resolutions are generally made while the effect of the use of tobacco practically paralyzes the cravings of millions of irritated nerve centers and just as soon as the effects commence to pass away these good resolutions weaken, showing conclusively that the use of tobacco is not a habit but a disease of the nervous system caused by the education of the nerves to crave for the nicotine poisoning. What then is the easy, permanent, natural way to relieve yourself of the use of tobacco? Certainly not by discontinuing it and suffering the nervous reaction and prostrating effects and mental degeneracy sure to follow the long and continued use of tobacco. Does it not suggest itself to you that the natural thing to do is to take a remedy that is specifically prepared to eradicate the effect of the nicotine in the system and to overcome the nerve craving effects and restore the tobacco irritated nerves to a normal and healthy condition? To this, we all say "Yes, there is the remedy?" You will find it in No-To-Bac. This is easily said and we all naturally ask for proof. Certainly. If No-To-Bac fails to cure, The Sterling Remedy Company, of New York, Montreal and Chicago have so much faith in their remedy, that they positively guarantee to refund the money, and the concern being owned and operated by some of the most reputable business men of the east and west, is absolutely reliable and we are glad to say, able in every way to live up to its guarantee.

The sale of No-To-Bac within the past few years has assumed enormous proportions, almost entirely developed upon its merits and the recommendations of the cured. So great is the sale that it is hardly possible to go into any leading drug store without finding it on sale, and the druggist has nothing but words of praise to give it.

Sensible Farmers.

The reports from the corn districts indicate that the farmers propose to hold a large portion of the crop for higher prices. It was expected that the market would be flooded as soon as the fields were gathered, but so far the shipments have been comparatively small, and the product is being cribbed in great quantities by those who are not willing to let it go until they can realize a fair profit on it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Suing For a Town Site.

Five heirs of Peter Cassady at Princeton, Ills., have sued for the site of South Omaha. The litigation involves nearly $1,000,000. They base their claim on a technicality in the original transfers of the land years ago when it was of little value.

The claim involves 238 acres. Part of this belongs now, or formerly belonged, to the South Omaha Land company and is platted into blocks and lots.

Crazy About Hypnotism.

Owosso, Mich., is daft on hypnotism. It has passed the experimental or speculative stage entirely in that place.

Doctors and preachers practice it, and even school children have taken it up. To such extent is it prevalent that it has become a menace to the public welfare.

A CANAL CHOKED UP

Is practically useless. The human organism is provided with a canal which sometimes becomes choked up, namely, the bowels, through which much of the effete and waste matter of the system escapes. When they are obstructed—constipated, in other words—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will relieve them effectually, but without pain, and institute a regular habit of body. This medicine also remedies malarial, bilious, dyspeptic, rheumatic, nervous and kidney trouble, and strengthens the entire system.

MR. BAYARD'S SPEECH.

The Part of the Address Which Has Caused an Uproar.

Here are the particular words which Embassador Bayard used in his now famous address in Edinburgh recently on "Individual Freedom," which have caused so much comment:

"In my own country I have witnessed the insatiable growth of that form of state socialism styled 'protection,' which I believe has done more to foster class legislation and create inequality of fortune, to corrupt public life, to banish men of independent mind and character from the public councils, to lower the tone of national representation, blunt public conscience, create false standards in the popular mind, to familiarize it with reliance upon state aid and guardianship in private affairs, divorce ethics from politics and place politics upon the low level of a mercenary scramble, than any other single cause.

"Step by step, and largely owing to the confusion of civil strife, it has succeeded in obtaining control of the sovereign power of taxation, never hesitating at any alliance or the resort to any combination that promised to assist its purpose of perverting public taxation from its only true justification and function, of creating revenue for the support of the government of the whole people, into an engine for the selfish and private profit of allied beneficiaries and combinations called 'trusts.' Under its dictation individual enterprise and independence have been oppressed and the energy of discovery and invention debilitated and discouraged.

"It has unhesitatingly allied itself with every policy which tends to commercial isolation, dangerously depletes the treasury and saps the popular conscience by schemes of corrupting favor and largesse to special classes, whose support is thereby attracted.

"Thus it has done so much to throw legislation into the political market, where jobbers and chafferers take the place of statesmen."

Still Earning Honest Livings.

A Portland merchant has recently had illustrated to him, in the person of two commercial travelers, great vicissitudes of fortune. One who called to solicit trade for a certain brand of catchup was at one time one of the leading merchants of Boston, and his residence, when adversity came, sold under the hammer for $73,000. The other, who had a line of cigars, had been twice elected governor of one of the largest of the middle western states.—Portland Advertiser.

Wants Part of New York.

William Edwards, an attorney of Alexandria, Ind., has gone to New York to lay claim to an estate that is valued at $30,000,000. It lies in the central part of the city and is covered by a 99 year lease, in many respects like that of the famous Harlem estate claim. He says it is by no means a myth and that he has it already worked out and ready to present. John R. Houdst of Muncie, he says, is one of the heirs.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

How to Play Golf.

To his other accomplishments Gus Heege, the actor, has added the art of golf playing. His description of the sport will prove interesting. "I'll tell you," said he to a party of friends recently, "golf is easy. First, you go down to the store, buy 15 clubs, a bag and a small ball. Then you hire a small boy to carry them and take him along until you find a broad, open field, with a small molehill in the middle of it. You place the small ball on the top of the molehill and ask the boy for a club. You gyrate for a moment for effect, then make a determined swoop and see how far you can knock the ball. Here's where the game begins. If you find the ball the same day you hit it, you win."

A Salvation War.

A fierce but somewhat funny war is waging in Pontiac, Mich., where the Salvation Army has its headquarters in the same building with a saloon, the former up stairs and the latter on the ground floor. Every man who wants a drink has to run the gantlet of a line of pickets set out by the Salvationists, and the incidents of the skirmishes and hand to hand conflicts are highly interesting to onlookers.

A Curious Fact.

It is a curious fact that there are 635 more persons and firms engaged in the liquor business in the prohibition state of Iowa than in Kentucky, where the manufacture of whisky is considered a fine art and its consumption an accomplishment.

An Eye to Business.

It might have been suspected that when St. Louis put up that fine railway station it had in view some scheme which would bring it into use.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency stay the current of dissolution bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

A MONDAINE'S VIEW OF VENUS.

Men will rave about the Venus—
Her of Melos—though her waist
Would drive any woman crazy
If she couldn't have it laced.

Such preposterous proportions
May do well enough in art,
But you really can't imagine
Venus ever looking "smart."

Any French modiste will tell you
That she never could be chic
With that waist. I vow 'tis nearly,
If not quite, a half yard thick.

Oh, of course she "goes" in marble,
But she'd hardly be a belle
In a '30 gown. You'd never Think her "swagger" now nor "swell."

A la mode she'd be a monster,
Would the goddess, and it grieves
Fin de siecle souls to fancy
What she'd look like in big sleeves.

Venus never would be "in it,"
And the men who rhapsodize
O'er her form would, were she mortal,
Be the first to criticise.

Were the goddess gowned in fashion
Then, for all her wond'rous face,
They would find her figure "vulgar"
And declare she'd better lace.
—Boston Globe.

THE COST OF A TRAIN

At the time when the first open court of law was established in Russia a lady, dressed with the utmost elegance, was walking on the Moscow promenade, leaning upon her husband's arm and letting the long train of her rich dress sweep the dirt of the street.

A young officer, coming hastily from a side street, was so careless as to catch one of his spurs in the lady's train, and in an instant a great piece was torn out of the costly but frail material of the dress.

"I beg a thousand pardons, madame," said the officer, with a polite bow, and then was about passing on when he was detained by the lady's husband.

"You have insulted my wife."

"Nothing was farther from my intention, sir. Your wife's long dress is to blame for the accident, which I sincerely regret, and I beg you once more to receive my apologies for any carelessness on my part." Thereupon he attempted to hasten on.

"You shall not escape so," said the lady. "Today is the first time I have worn this dress, and it cost 200 rubles, which you must make good."

"My dear madame, I beg you not to detain me. I am obliged to go on duty at once. As to the 200 rubles, I really cannot help the length of your dress, yet I beg your pardon for not having been more cautious."

"You shall not stir, sir. That you are obliged to go on duty is nothing to us. My wife is right. The dress must be made good."

The officer's face grew pale.

"You force me to break through the rules of the service, and I shall receive punishment."

"Pay the 200 rubles, and you are free."

The quickly changing color in the young man's face betrayed how inwardly disturbed he was, but stepping close up to them both he said, with apparent self command:

"You will renounce your claim when I tell you that I am a poor man, who has nothing to live on but his officer's pay, and the amount of that pay hardly reaches the sum of 200 rubles in a whole year. I can therefore make no amends for the misfortune except by again begging your pardon."

"Oh, anybody could say all that, but we'll see if it's true. We'll find out if you have nothing but your pay. I declare myself not satisfied with your excuses, and I demand my money," persisted the lady in the hard voice of a thoroughly unfeeling woman.

"That is true—you are right," the husband added, dutifully supporting her. "By good luck we have the open court now in session. Go with us before the judge, and he will decide the matter."

All protestations on the officer's part that he was poor, was expected on duty, and so forth, did not help matters. To avoid an open scene he went with them to the courtroom, where the gallery was densely packed with a crowd of people.

After waiting some time the lady had leave to bring her complaint.

"What have you to answer to this?" said the judge, turning to the officer, who seemed embarrassed and half in despair.

"On the whole very little. As the lateness of the hour and being required on duty compelled me to hurry I did not notice this lady's train, which was dragging on the ground. I caught one of my spurs in it and had the misfortune to tear her dress. Madame would not receive my excuses, but perhaps now she might find herself more disposed to forgiveness when I again declare that I committed this awkward blunder without any mischievous intention, and I earnestly beg that she will pardon me."

A murmur ran through the gallery, evidently from the people taking sides with the defendant, and against long trains in general and this lady in particular.

The judge called to order and asked, "Are you satisfied with the defendant's explanations?"

"Not at all satisfied. I demand 200 rubles for my torn dress."

"Defendant, will you pay this sum?"

"I would have paid it long before this had I been in a position to do so. Unfortunately I am poor. My pay as an officer is all that I have to live on."

"You hear, complainant, that the defendant is not able to pay the sum you demand of him. Do you still wish the complaint to stand?"

"I wish it to stand. The law shall give me my rights."

There ran through the rows of people a murmur of indignation that sounded like a rushing of water.

"Consider, complainant, the consequence of your demand. The defendant can be punished only through being deprived of his personal liberty, and by that you can obtain no satisfaction, while to the defendant it might prove the greatest injury in his rank and position as an officer who is poor and dependent upon his pay. Do you still insist upon your complaint?"

"I still insist upon it."

The course the affair was taking seemed to have become painful to the lady's husband. He spoke with his wife urgently, but without effect. The judge was going on to further consideration of the case, when a loud voice was heard from the audience:

"I will place the 200 rubles at the service of the defendant!"

During the silence which followed a gentleman forced his way through the crowd and placed himself at the young officer's side.

"Sir, I am the Prince W—— and beg you will accept the loan of the 200 rubles in question."

"Prince, I am not worthy of your kindness, for I don't know if I shall ever be able to pay the loan," answered the officer in a voice tremulous with emotion.

"Take the money at all events. I can wait until you are able to return it." Thereupon the prince held out two notes of 100 rubles each, and coming close to him whispered a few words very softly. There was a sudden lighting up in the officer's face. He immediately took the two notes, and turning to the lady handed them to her with a polite bow.

"I hope, madame, you are satisfied."

With a malicious smile she reached out her hand for the money.

"Yes. Now I am satisfied."

With a scornful glance over the crowd of spectators she prepared to leave the room on her husband's arm.

"Stop, madame," said the officer, who had suddenly become like another man.

"What do you want?" said the lady, casting a look upon him as insulting as possible.

"I want my dress," he answered, with a slight but still perfectly polite bow.

"Give me your address and I will send it to you."

"Oh, no, my dear madame, I am in the habit of taking my purchases with me at once. Favor me with the dress immediately."

A shout of approbation came from the gallery.

"Order!" cried the judge.

"What an insane demand!" said the lady's husband. "My wife cannot undress herself here."

"I have nothing to do with you in this matter, sir, but only with the complainant. Be so good as to give me the dress immediately, madame. My affairs are urgent."

The pleasure of the audience at the expense of the lady increased with every word.

"Do not jest any more about it. I will hurry and send you the dress as soon as possible."

"I am not jesting. I demand from the representative of the law my own property, the dress," said the officer, raising his voice.

The judge, thus appealed to, decided promptly.

"The officer is right, madame. You are obliged to hand him over the dress on the spot."

"I can't undress myself here before all these people and go home without any dress on," said the young woman, with anger and tears.

"You should have thought of that sooner. Now you have no time to lose. Either give up the dress of your own accord, or"—

A nod that could not be misinterpreted brought to the lady's side two officers of justice who seemed about to take upon themselves the office of my lady's maid.

"Take your money back and leave me my dress!"

"Oh, no, madame! That dress is now worth more than 200 rubles to me."

"How much do you ask for it?"

"Two thousand rubles," said the officer firmly.

"I will pay the sum," the weeping lady's husband responded promptly. "I have here 500 rubles. Give me a pen and paper, and I will write an order upon my banker for the remaining 1,500."

After he had written the draft the worthy pair withdrew amid hisses from the audience.—From the French.

Swiss Swords, Spanish Pikes.

The prowess of the Swiss infantry is generally dated back to Morgarten (1315) or forward to Sempach (1386), but in reality it can be traced to a generation or two, some say a century and a half, before the former action. Be that as it may, Morgarten first announced the fame of the Swiss to Europe. Sempach raised it still higher, and finally the three terrible defeats of Charles the Bold at Granson, Morat and Nancy (1476-77) established it forever.

From that time the Swiss became the model of Europe. The German landsknechts adopted their weapons and tactics, and even for a time their name, while crafty little Louis XI took 6,000 of them into his pay and set them to teach his Frenchmen their work, for all Europe required to learn true soldiership, to obey orders and, above all, to preserve formation, which has been the secret of the Swiss victories. Before the fifteenth century was passed came Charles VIII's celebrated expedition to Italy and his entry into Rome, wherein the carriage and order of his Swiss mercenaries were the amazement of all beholders.

It was the French interference with Italian affairs that spread the new discipline abroad, for among the opponents of the most Christian king was a man of genius, the general of Ferdinand of Aragon, Gonsalvo of Cordova, known over all Europe as the Great Captain. He, when the campaign was ended, in 1498, took the remodeling of the Spanish forces in hand and laid the foundation of the famous tercios that were soon to supplant the Swiss companies as the pattern for European infantry. It was in the Spanish tongue that the pike was first named the "queen of all weapons."—Macmillan's Magazine.

NOW A NEW REVOLT.

PUERTO RICO MAY SHAKE OFF THE BONDS OF SPAIN.

Some Interesting Information About the Picturesque Little Island That Is Tired of Spanish Oppression—Plans of the Revolutionists—Their Grievances.

There is a likelihood that Spain will soon have another rebellion on her hands. The inhabitants of Puerto Rico, tired of Spanish rule and encouraged by the partial success of their Cuban neighbors, now threaten to revolt after enduring oppression for 400 years.

Puerto Rico is the only colony besides Cuba that remains of all the great possessions Spain once had in the western hemisphere. It is only a little island, the smallest of the Greater Antilles, and the farthest east of the group. It is separated from Cuba by the island of Haiti, whose people have thrown off the yoke and enjoy the freedom of a republic.

Puerto Rico is almost rectilinear in shape. It is about 100 miles in length from east to west and about 40 miles in width. Yet on this little island there are over 800,000 inhabitants. Just what percentage of the population is ready to take up arms against Spain and fight for freedom it is difficult to estimate.

There is no doubt, however, about the prevalence of the anti-Spanish feeling. The people there are born with a hatred for Spain that increases with their years. Their numbers may be many, but their resources are small. All the arms on the island are owned by the Spanish, who control the sale of guns and ammunition.

The Puerto Rican revolutionary party which was recently formed in New York purposes to supply this deficiency. At the first meeting an impromptu collection was taken and over $500 contributed. The revolutionists are now organizing branches in other cities, and expect to raise enough money in a short time to send well equipped expeditions to the island with large supplies of arms and ammunition. Then, when the word is given for the revolt, the patriots will be well armed.

Dr. J. Julio Henna of New York, who has been elected president of the revolutionary party, says that the Puerto Ricans and the Cubans are to combine their resources in this country and help each other, at the same time dividing Spain's attention.

"Money is coming in rapidly for the purchase of arms and ammunition," he said. "Like Cubans, Puerto Ricans are compelled to suffer the burden of an absurd and heavy taxation. Our people are downtrodden and enslaved. Outrages by the Spanish government upon the people are of common occurrence. Our police is composed of ex-convicts sent from Spain, and our people are subjected to gross outrages at the hands of these men, who are invested with a power that makes them petty tyrants. We realize our strength now. We, too, will fight for independence, and with Spain's waning energies divided between the two countries Cubans and Puerto Ricans hope to achieve their freedom."

It is a fair land, this little island, and a rich one. In the interior are several mountain ranges from whose slopes plunge down over 1,000 streams that empty into the ocean. Most of these rivers are navigable part of their length.

There are 40 or more towns and cities, and a railroad almost encircles the island. The principal port and capital is San Juan. This is a historic and picturesque old city. It is defended by Morro castle, where a garrison of some 4,000 soldiers is maintained.

The bulk of Puerto Rico's trade is with England, but owing to heavy duties and taxes it is carried on in Spanish ships. Spain comes next in rank as a customer, and the United States is third on the list.

The productiveness of this small colony is surprising. The average annual yield of coffee is 15,600 tons; of sugar, 67,000 tons; of tobacco, 7,000,000 pounds—astonishing figures. Besides this, many tropical fruits are exported as well as some cotton. The tobacco is said to excel that of Cuba, and the cotton is very valuable. There are gold, copper, iron and lead deposits there, but the mines are not worked. In 1893 Puerto Rico sent to the United States over $2,000,000 worth of sugar and coffee and fruit to the value of about $3,000,000. We sent them in return flour, butter, cheese, codfish, iron and steel to the value of over $3,700,000, besides 2,650 tons of machinery and 11,000 tons of coal.

Taxation is the curse of the country. The inhabitants are taxed almost every time they turn around. They are taxed, in fact, when they go from one city to the other. Travelers have to pay $4 to land on the island. The taxes on foreign ships are particularly heavy and unjust.

The island is governed wholly by Spaniards, who are sent from Madrid. Every petty officer is a Spanish tyrant in the eyes of the people. This horde of officeholders the Puerto Ricans have to support as well as furnish money to carry on war against their neighbors, the Cubans. No wonder they are ripe for rebellion.

Canadian Butter In England.

In the days when Denmark was not the power in trade it is now, and when competition over 12,000 miles of ocean was not dreamed of, Canada had a fair portion of the butter trade then existing in England. But when the people there thought they could do just as they liked, and sent across stuff which was good enough when nothing else could be got, it was of course refused here as soon as we had so many sources of supply to turn to where a good article could be obtained. Shippers in Montreal have blinded themselves to the change that has come over the trade and have persisted in placing butter bought cheap in the summer in cold storage, to await the advent of better prices, and have then shipped it when the bloom has disappeared and all its connection with the pastures of the Dominion has been effaced.

The natural result has been that merchants here have refused to buy it save as a substitute for train oil, and the trade has dwindled to miserable proportions. Now, as it would seem, too late, they have awakened to a sense of the big mistake they have been making, and shipments are coming forward in cool chambers, whence they are transferred from railway refrigerator cars. On all of the new supply a bonus of 1 cent a pound is paid by the province of Quebec, the government being responsible for the railway and steamship arrangements. This has to be fresh made creamery butter, and the design is to re-establish Canada's credit on our markets. Should the return be in proportion to the outlay, other provinces will no doubt follow the lead and Canada once again become prominent in our returns.—Chambers' Journal.

A Quaker City Eccentric.

It is safe to say that no other big city has such a queer crank of the cranks as Philadelphia has in what is known as "the wooden man." He has attracted so much attention that he now poses for notice and changes his wonderful costumes almost daily. Formerly he carried a cane in his pocket, projecting, or else over his shoulder. Then for some time he wore a red band around his hat. His latest wrinkle is an overcoat with red binding on the pockets, a curious canvas collar and red piping up the back of the coat. On the side of the collar, not in front, but close to his left ear, he wears a huge chrysanthemum. Every afternoon he promenades Chestnut street when it is crowded and takes off his hat to every woman who looks at him. Many women are afraid of him and cross the street or go into doorways. He is a colored man who is employed around the wharves of a steamship company early in the morning and in the afternoons dresses in this way. He has been doing it for many years. At one time he haunted the hotel corridors, but he has long since been refused admittance.—Philadelphia Times.

Naked Lamps Still Used In Many Mines.

The most deplorable feature about the calamity at the mining town of Dayton, Tenn., is the fact that 16 men lost their lives needlessly. They used the dangerous open lamps in their work, regardless of the record of death from such carelessness with which the history of coal mining is strewn. As long ago as 1815 Sir Humphry Davy invented a lamp to prevent accidents in coal mines, founded on the principle that flame, in passing through iron wire meshes, loses so much of its heat as to leave it incapable of igniting inflammable gases. Yet at this late day there are mines employing scores of men, in which naked lights are used, ready to ignite explosive gases at any moment and send the workmen into eternity. The company which operates the Dayton mines has decided that hereafter no open lamps will be allowed. This decision comes too late to be of any benefit to the 16 men who are dead and to the 16 households which have been plunged into mourning. The calamity should be a warning to other mine owners and to other miners.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Turnstile Defenses of Chicago.

Even if British war vessels should get into lake waters it does not follow that Detroit and the other points would be easy prey. Granting, however, that they would strike colors, it again does not follow that Chicago would do likewise.

Chicago is one of the best defended cities this side of Doomsday. On its lake front from the river to Jackson park is the Illinois Central railroad. Now, England has bumped against many a foe, worthy and unworthy, but she has never encountered the Illinois Central. When she does, she will not only abandon all notions of capturing Chicago, but she will find a turnstile on every ship, and if she fools around here long enough she will lose the ships.

The Monroe doctrine is a stanch affair, but in comparison with the turnstile doctrine it is lame, wabbling, vacillating. If England wishes to retain her autonomy, she will not monkey with Chicago.—Chicago News.

A Humorist In the Commons.

Mr. Radcliffe Cooke, who is pushing the cider of his native county of Herefordshire with an energy which a Chicago drummer might envy, is one of the quaintest and most original humorists in the house of commons. He is a small man with a big head, which he puts on one side in a birdlike fashion when he addresses the house that is irresistibly droll. He was returned for Newington in 1885 and again on the Unionist wave in 1886. But he lacked the infinite capacity of attending smoking concerts and writing checks which is essential to popularity in a metropolitan constituency, and so he was turned out in 1892. When Mr. W. H. Grenfell retired from the next parliament on the question of bimetallism, Mr. Radcliffe Cooke was returned at the byelection for Hereford city, near which he farms a small property; hence the cider agitation.—Saturday Review.

NEGRO CHURCH SONGS

AN INTERESTING FEATURE OF THE CONGRESS ON AFRICA.

Some Typical Religious Airs Sung at the Atlanta Exposition—"Rise and Shine," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and All the Old Favorites Given by a Negro Chorus.

The recent congress on Africa at the Atlanta exposition presented some new and unusual aspects. It also presented some things which to the people who know the negro in the south are not new, and among these things was the music. While the proceedings of the gathering were strongly characterized by a ripeness of thought and culture creditable to the race, the musical feature was made up of those primitive negro melodies which bear the stamp of the negro imagination and which are peculiarly suited to the expression of the religious feelings of the race.

These songs are African in their origin and mold. They were written by negroes and are strong types of the musical literature of the people. As such it is encouraging to note that the intelligent minds which directed the congress fully appreciated them. The singing of the songs was a feature of the congress. They were sung by an appreciative choir of energetic students of one of the progressive colored schools.

The airs are the popular church airs of the negroes—the race generally. Of course the city churches do not use them so much, but throughout the south they are sung by the colored people. The more polished and ambitious efforts of the negroes are far less popular with the race. The songs "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "Steal Way," "Rise and Shine, Brother," "I'm A-rolling," "He Rose From the Dead" and others are familiar to nearly every grown up member of the race. The rendition of these songs proved to be a striking feature of the congress.

"Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," is one of the most popular of all the songs. Follow the drift:

Swing low, sweet chariot,
Coming for to carry me home,
Swing low, sweet chariot,
Coming for to carry me home.

I looked over Jordan and what did I see,
Coming for to carry me home?
A band of angels coming after me,
Coming for to carry me home.

If you get there before I do,
Coming for to carry me home,
Tell all my friends I'm coming, too,
Coming for to carry me home.

I'm sometimes up and sometimes down,
Coming for to carry me home,
But still my soul feels heavenly bound,
Coming for to carry me home.

"Steal Away" is scarcely less popular. A few sample verses:

Steal away, steal away,
Steal away to Jesus!
Steal away, steal away home—
I hain't got long to stay here.

My Lord calls me,
He calls me by the thunder;
The trumpet sounds it in my soul—
I hain't got long to stay here.

Green trees are bending,
Poor sinners stand trembling;
The trumpet sounds it in my soul—
I hain't got long to stay here.

Tombstones are bursting,
Poor sinners are trembling;
The trumpet sounds it in my soul—
I hain't got long to stay here.

"I'm A-Rolling" is another of the typical melodies, running:

I'm a-rolling, I'm a-rolling,
I'm a-rolling thro' an unfriendly world,
I'm a-rolling, I'm a-rolling,
I'm a-rolling thro' an unfriendly world.

O brothers, won't you help me,
O sisters, won't you help me to pray,
O preachers, won't you help me to fight,
Won't you help me in the service of the Lord?

The song that stirs up the religious activities of the race more than any other perhaps is "Rise and Shine." It is sung universally. It runs:

O brethren, rise and shine and give God the glory, glory;
Rise and shine and give God the glory, glory;
Rise and shine and give God the glory for the year of jubilee.

Don't you want to be a soldier, soldier, soldier, soldier?
Don't you want to be a soldier, soldier, soldier?
Don't you want to be a soldier, soldier for the year of jubilee?

Do you think I will make a soldier
For the year of jubilee?

Yes, I think you will make a soldier
For the year of jubilee.

—Atlanta Constitution.

ENGLAND'S FINANCIAL RAID.

There is not the remotest probability of war between this country and England, and the unanimous stand of congress in defense of the president's demand for the scrupulous maintenance of national honor will do more to halt the raid upon American securities, to restore American credit and to maintain peace between the two great civilized countries of the world than anything else could have done. The raid is purely speculative, and there will be no war.—Philadelphia Times.

It appears that the selling out of American securities is a put up job by British financiers to assist the English side of the Venezuelan dispute. If this be true, it is an offense of great magnitude. This conspiracy is excused as a peace measure, but it is really one of the worst and most farreaching of war measures, as the "financial kings" may realize to their financial cost one of these days.—Hartford Post.

To the clearer and nonpartisan vision the president's message is, by reason of its very decisiveness, a peace message, and everything that congress is now doing, the providing for ships and defenses and a commission to inquire into the matter of the disputed boundary, is a measure of peace on the principle that the surest guarantee of peace is to be prepared for war.—Providence News.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

Tumblers Were First Made of Silver and Came Honestly by Their Name.

How many times a day do we use a word without stopping to think what it means? Every day we drink out of a tumbler. Why is the large glass that holds our milk or water so called? Years ago Professor Max Muller was giving a luncheon at All Souls' college, Oxford, to the Princess Alice, the wife of the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt and the second daughter of Queen Victoria. The curiosity of the strangers present was excited by a set of little round bowls of silver, about the size of a large orange. They were brought round filled to the brim with the ale.

These were tumblers, and the guests were shown how they came by their names—a fitting lesson for the guests of a philologist! When one of these little bowls was empty, it was placed upon the table, mouth downward. Instantly, so perfect was its balance, it flew back into its proper position, as if asking to be filled again. No matter how it was treated—trundled along the floors, balanced carefully on its side, dropped suddenly upon the soft, thick carpet—up it rolled again and settled itself with a few gentle shakings and swayings into its place, like one of those india rubber tumbling dolls babies delight in. This, then, says The Jewelers' Circular, was the origin of our word tumbler, at first made of silver, as are all these All Souls' tumblers. Then, when glass became common, the round glasses that stood on a flat base superseded the exquisitely balanced silver spheres and stole their names so successfully that you have to go to All Souls' and a few other old houses to see the real thing.

How Do You Spell Shakespeare?

Seeing that spelling appears to be, after all, somewhat a matter of taste, it need not surprise us that there has been, and still is, much difference of opinion as to how the name of William Shakespeare should be spelled. An English writer says that the form used has the approval of 282 authorities; 111 declare for "Shakspeare," 42 stand up for "Shakespear" and 33 are for "Shakspere." There are, it is said, 37 ways of spelling it, but these are the favorite forms. "Shaxper" is one of the styles, so we have had a narrow escape.

"The Cricket on the Hearth."

The original idea of the "Cricket" was connected with the weekly periodical which Charles Dickens had long had in his mind, but which had to wait for a few years longer. "What do you think," he wrote to Forster, after the first plan was given up, "of a notion that has occurred to me in connection with our abandoned little weekly? It would be a delicate and beautiful fancy for a Christmas book, making the cricket a little household god—silent in the wrong and sorrow of the tale and loud again when all went well and happy."

The result of this happy fancy was the delightful "Cricket on the Hearth." The story was irresistible, and Dot and the Carrier, Caleb Plummer and Bertha, Tackleton and Tilly Slowboy, took their places among the greatest of the public favorites. And, happily, no unusual strain was involved in the work. The career of the "Cricket" was pleasant and peaceful from the first.—Charles Dickens the Younger in Good Words.

Old Sayings and Proverbs.

No less an authority than Lord Chesterfield advised against the use of old sayings and common proverbs, which, he said, are so many proofs of having kept bad and low company. For example, if instead of saying that tastes are different, and that every man has his peculiar one, you should let off a proverb and say that "What is one man's meat is another man's poison," or else "Every one as they like, as the good man said when he kissed his cow," everybody would be persuaded that you had never kept company with anybody above footmen and housemaids.

When Elevators Were Invented.

The latest cyclopedia says that elevators in some forms have been used for many years, moved by horse or man power, but that the modern elevator dates from about 1850. Assuming that to be correct, says the New York Sun, E. G. Otis would seem to be the inventor of the elevator of today, as it was about 1850 that he obtained a chance to install one of his machines in that city, where it worked successfully. He exhibited his machine at the Crystal palace in New York in 1853-8.

Three True Kisses.

An English writer says that there are three kisses in a world of miscellaneous osculation which may be counted true—the kiss the mother lightly lays upon her baby's lips, the kiss the mother gives her boy as he goes forth into the world and the kiss we press upon the still, pale lips of the dead. All the rest are like the strawberries in the bottom of the basket—to be regarded with suspicion.

The Laughing Plant.

Among curious plants one of the most notable has been discovered recently in Arabia, where it is known by the natives as the "laughing plant." It does not do any laughing itself, as might be inferred from its title, but it causes whosoever eats its seeds to break out into fits of the most uncontrolled and immoderate mirth.

WONDER OF DOCTORS.

EDGAR PRATT, THOUGH OSSIFIED, WAS A POWERFUL PREACHER.

Only Completely Ossified Man on Record. Said to Have Converted Thousands—Museum Offers All Refused—Now His Grave Has Been Robbed.

The item appearing in the daily papers narrating how the grave of Edgar Pratt, well known as the ossified man, had been robbed recently caused considerable excitement in the vicinity where Edgar Pratt was born, educated, learned his trade, transacted business and where his widow and her mother at present reside.

Edgar Pratt was a son of William Pratt, a well known farmer, who for many years resided on a farm which he owned on the town line road between Williamson and Ontario, south of the Ridge road, so called. The family is one of the oldest in Wayne county, N. Y.

The ossified man was born in the town of Williamson, N. Y.; was educated at the public schools in that village and completed his education in Sodus academy. He was a well formed young man, bright and fine looking. He went to Sodus, N. Y., about 1878 and went to work for Charles Delano, learning the trade of carriage trimming. He was not religiously inclined, in which respect he differed very materially from his parents and other members of the Pratt family. While the young man was working at his trade his father sold the farm, and with the family removed to Douglass, Butler county, Kan., the son, Edgar, accompanying them. The latter secured a position as stage driver. Through exposure on the stage route he contracted rheumatism, which eventually compelled his abandoning that vocation. His condition became critical. He recovered from his illness and shortly afterward removed to Sodus, where he opened up a carriage trimming establishment in the Mills building on Maple street. Rheumatism returned, and he was soon prostrated with his old ailment. Medical science was invoked, but nothing could be done. At length, being in destitute circumstances, his brother, Daniel Pratt, came from Kansas and took Edgar out west with him. Shortly after this, ossification began to set in, and the patient suffered untold agony.

An exhorter went to Douglass, which was then comparatively destitute of religious influences, and Pratt became converted. He joined the Methodist Episcopal church and soon became one of the warmest supporters of that denomination. Ossification by that time had become so advanced that the man was taken before a board of medical experts in New York city. The case had baffled the skill of all western physicians who had been consulted. The New York surgeons pronounced the case a most marvelous one in the annals of medical jurisprudence.

An offer of $1,000 per year during life and $5,000 to the widow at his death, provided Pratt would contract to have his body delivered to the New York medical experts at his death, was spurned, Pratt alleging that his condition was due to an act of Providence. He claimed that he was suffering a just punishment for not improving his talents while young and before being afflicted with disease. His exhortations became so pronounced that his religious admirers built a wagon, in which he lay stretched out rigid as a block of marble. During the last four years of his life he suffered no pain whatever, but was unable to move a joint. Starvation at one time threatened him, and four of his front teeth were removed, and through the aperture thin liquid food was injected, and thus was life sustained. In his carriage he was taken to camp meetings, where he was the center of attraction on account of his condition and the earnestness with which he exhorted. It is said that through his instrumentality thousands were converted.

Offers from museums were refused, Pratt insisting that his mission was to convert as many to religion as possible during his remaining days. His faithful wife remained with him until his death, which occurred less than a year ago. Museum managers and physicians, even after Pratt's death, continued to deluge the widow and parents of the ossified man with letters and telegrams offering large amounts for the remains. This so alarmed the father that he declined to allow his son to be buried in the Douglass cemetery, but instead had the body interred in a flower bed in the dooryard beneath the father's window, where he could keep an ever watchful eye upon it. It so happened, however, that the father was drawn as a juror at El Dorado, the county seat, and during his absence the ghouls succeeded in robbing the grave.

The relatives in Wayne county have signified their intention of uniting in offering a large reward for the arrest and conviction of the grave robbers. Viewed from a scientific standpoint, the case of Edgar Pratt was one of the most puzzling ever brought before the attention of medical experts. Pratt is believed to have been the only completely ossified man on record.—New York Times.

Moonlight.

Silence and a silver shade! Earth's toiling done, she lies
In perfect peace, while heaven bends so near
We almost hear the angels calling clear
Down silvered distances of star gemmed skies.
Each gentle zephyr, blown from paradise,
Is instinct with some soul we have held dear
And lingers lovingly, with grave, sweet cheer,
As longing to renew the cherished ties.
The river, murmuring tunefully afar,
Like a majestic hand upon the lyre
That sweeps from earth to heaven as it flows,
Brings "Gloria In Excelsis" from the stars,
The faroff chanting of an angel choir
And faint, sweet strains from oratorios.

FRI A, MARCH 20 ..... 1896

The order recently passed by the Board of Supervisors requiring the Superintendent of the County Hospital to notifiy the Supervisors when a death occurs at that institution is a move in the right direction. Deaths have occured there of late and no notice of the fact has been given to the outside public until weeks after the occurrence. A short time ago one of the Vallejo Supervisors was asked by one of his constituents concerning the condition of an old Vallejoite who had been sent to the hotpitals, and he replied that the party mentioned was doing nicely, and perfectly reconciled to his surroundings. A few days afterwards in glancing over his local paper the Supervisor discovered that the party inquired about had been dead over a month. It was principally due to this circumstance that the order was made.—Vallejo Republican.

The old man. Lane, who was the central figure in a disgusting sensation in the lower levels of life some time ago, was, we observe, acquitted the other day. Meanwhile, two of those who were arrested in connection with the same affair have been convicted and sent to the penitentiary. The evidence was not any stronger againts the men who were convicted than it was against Lane. Lane, however, was a man of means and the others were poor men. This does not make any difference in their responsibility to the law, but—well, the two poor men were promptly tried, convicted and sentenced, while the man of means was tardily tried and acquitted. The inference speaks for itself.—S. F., Town Talk.

Not long ago a masked and otherwise disguised gentleman essayed to rob an Oregon bank, but failed because another shotgun in the immediate vicinity was more intelligently manipulated than his own. A court pronounced him insane, and he was turned loose to recover. But, alas, instead of doing so he become crazier than ever ane manifested the eccensricity of a failing mind by "sweating" gold coin. This simple incident shows the beauty of regarding depravity as a mere misfortune. Carried into general use it would abolish prisons and leave the land to be overrun by robbers, footpads, pickpockets and swindlers, each safely and sadly non compos mentis.

It is frequently asserted that there is plenty of land for everybody who wants it at prices within the reach of any man who will work. This is said in reply to single taxers. Friday the government opened up 22,000 acres of land in Iowa, which had formerly been included in the Souix City and St. Paul land grant, and 1,000 people were camping in the vicinity, waiting for a chance to rush in and secure a home. If speculation in land was destroyed by the single tax, such a thing as a homeless man would be unknown in this country inside of sixty days.

One of the best indications that prosperity is returning is the fact that silver has touched the seventy cent market price. This is a gain of eighteen cents since the first of last November, and every indication points to the fact that it will find its normal position by the first of the next fiscal year. From fifty-two to seventy within five months is certainly cheering to the silver miners, and just as the market price advances, the cry for free silver coinage will abate. Its field of usefulness will never be abridged in this country.

The Democratic State Central Committee has given the party the advantage of a late convention. By the 20th of June the issues of the campaign ought to be well defined. Congress will have adjourned and its record will be before the country. The Republican national candidate and platform will be known, and the various Democratic candidates will have developed their strong points. California will know pretty well what she wants and be prepared to ask for it.

Only thirty two of the 361 important sugar factories in Cuba are running, and the normal output of the island, which is 1,500,000 tons, will be reduced this season to 100,000. No doubt all the other business interests of Cuba are suffering in the same proportion.

A German architect has recently constructed the framework of a dwelling house of water tubes. The water flowing through these pipes keep the house cool summer, and, by being heated before being forced through the tubes, helps to heat the house in winter.

A South African physician claims to have cured serious cases of smallpox and like diseases by wrapping his patient in a blanket wet with with milk. Milk, he claims, readily absorbes poisonous germs, and is very useful in the treatment of all diseases.

The Brown case is approaching an end. It has been quite a lift to newspapers during a dull period. It has been genuine war in the midst of many false alarms, and whether Brown or his enemies conquer, religion has had to suffer.

In the United States 800,000,000 one-cent pieces are in circulation, and the call upon the mint for more is lively. It is plain that the little coin has an important mission to perform in America.

Heads that wear crowns are believed not to lie uneasy. They don't lie. The owners just sit up and doze with an eye open.

The Valley railroad expects to be running in time for this year's grain crop.

A PICTURESQUE CLIPPER.

Hard to Tell the Real Color of a Fashionable Horse.

When a horse's coat was left the way nature made it, it was easy to distinguish a bay from a sorrel or a dun from a brown. But now fashion dictates that carriage horses must be kept as closely shaven as a convict's pate, and, except black and white ones, they look all of one color. Nature lets their hair grow long in winter so as to protect them from the cold. Fashion says the hair must be clipped off and blankets substituted to keep the horse warm. Fashion has also decreed that the horse's tail must be cut off short and a linen robe put over him to keep flies off.

The illustration shows one of the machines that operate to give the smooth, hairless skin to the city horse. The only thing that can be said in favor of clipping the equine coat is that during the shedding season it prevents flying hairs from covering the carriage and harness and even getting inside upon my lady's hat. But when the animals are shaved off smooth and driven in bitter midwinter weather without blankets, as they are sometimes, then fashion becomes barbarous cruelty. The clipping instrument that the barber uses to shave men's heads in summer is constructed on the same principle as the horse clipper.

Horse and Colt Feed.

To begin, it is essential in order to obtain the greatest growth for the least outlay that all grain should be fed bruised and in conjunction with cut or chopped hay. A hay cutter should form a part of every farm's equipment. A large bin should be constructed on the main floor of the feedhouse.

The grain grinder may be set on the ground floor, as the ground feed is more easily handled from the mill than the cut hay. Hay cutters are operated at such high speed that unless there is a hole in the floor, through which the machine may be relieved of its product by the simple force of gravitation, floor room is rapidly taken up and loss of time ensues. It pays the owner of any large number of horses to grind his own grain and cut his own hay. Either a tread power, sweep power or a small engine may be used to advantage, the engine being the most convenient. Bran also should be largely used in compounding a ration for young, growing horses or brood mares, and at its present prices, $12 to $13 per ton, it is economical food. In feeding the colts the object is to produce bone and muscle.

Ground oats and barley are the best muscle makers and fed with cut hay bran and a little linseed meal will give very satisfactory results. The last named food is, as is well known, a byproduct of the linseed oil mills and can be obtained at a very moderate figure. A pound per day for each colt will, in the course of the winter, add greatly to the nutriment derived from coarser grains and keep the colt's stomach in good condition. It must be laid down as beyond the possibility of contradiction that to stint the colts or brood mares in their feed because grain is high in price is a suicidal policy and one the effects of which will be felt on the farm for many a long season. For this reason true economy is in feeding judiciously. This is achieved by feeding the colts a ration of ground barley and oats, bran and cut hay. The mass should be slightly dampened, but not fed sloppy by any means. In the coldest of the winter days some ground corn may be used in place of one or other of the grains mentioned. It makes a change, and being heating may be used to advantage for a few days.

Roots should be fed in abundance, both boiled and raw. Rutabagas, turnips or carrots are all keenly relished by horses and have a very beneficial effect on their stomachs. To the evening feed some boiled roots may be added and fed regularly with great relish. Rutabagas are the best for this purpose. Carrots also do very well cooked, but as they are very palatable a few fed raw with the morning or noon ration form a welcome change. This year the feeding of wheat to horses has become somewhat general, and if the present prices of this great staple product are to remain below 66 cents it may be that it will come into general use as a horse food. It is not likely that wheat will ever be used by itself, either ground or whole, as a horse food, but it may be that it can be profitably fed in conjunction with some of the other feeds we have mentioned. An abundant supply of roughage should be given the colts, and the greater the variety offered them the better progress will they make. With weanlings the racks should not be stuffed full and the colts left to work away at them for days until they get them emptied. A well bred weanling is a dainty feeder, which fact should be noted and taken advantage of in this way. If a little hay is given them often, they will eat more of it, as it will not be breathed on and pulled about as it is if a lot of it is left with them for any length of time.

Nicely cured corn fodder, cut at the right time and not too coarse, is readily eaten by all horses, and if run through a shredder and stored in the barn is a most economical food. Prairie or even marsh hay makes an appetizing change from the regulation timothy, and good first crop clover may be fed with the very best results to colts of all ages.—Horseman.

Rubinstein's Charity.

Rubinstein had probably traveled more than other any virtuoso. In his time he made many fortunes and gave them away to the poor in Russia. During the famine which raged among the Russian peasants a few years ago he journeyed to Vienna, Moscow and St. Petersburg to play for charity. The price of seats rose to unheard of figures, but every penny of the money went to the starving farmers. It is said that in the course of 28 years the sum which he thus disposed of amounted to $250,000.

MUTTON BREEDS.

The Type of Sheep Meat Raisers Should Go In For.

Professor Thomas Shaw of the Minnesota agricultural experiment station thus outlines in The Breeder's Gazette the kind of sheep that breeders should aim to produce now that there is no more money in wool:

First.—The mutton breeds all possess the same leading essentials as to form. These include: 1. Width, depth and length of body and compactness of frame. 2. The cylindrical shape which is the outcome of plump shoulders and ribs and well sprung ribs. 3. A fleece of even length and quality, covering all parts of the body.

Second.—The minor points of difference include: 1. Variations in size of carcass and bone. 2. Variations in the length of the leg of the coupling of the body. 3. The color of the head and legs and the amount of covering on them. 4. The form and carriage of the head. 5. The length, shape and carriage of the ears. 6. The length of the fleece and the character of the staple.

Third.—Leading essentials of the rams of the mutton breeds as to form: 1. Size medium to large for the breed, and the bone medium to strong, but not coarse. 2. Outline—The body should be smooth, compact and strong, cylindrical in shape and square at the ends. 3. Head medium to strong in size, short rather than long, but varying with the breed and carried proudly. (a) Nose and muzzle tapering, but not too fine. (b) Nostrils wide and expanding. (c) Forehead and poll wide. (d) Eye large, full, bright and daring. (e) Ear medium in size and thickness for the breed; broad rather than long; erect rather than drooping and possessed of lively play. 4. Neck short rather than long, not coarse and carrying the head well erect. (a) It should not be coarse at the junction with the head and should be free from throatiness. (b) It should be round rather than flat and should increase in width laterally and underneath as it recedes from the head. (c) It should fit into the withers evenly above and into the shoulders evenly and strongly at the sides and underneath, the blending being imperceptible. 5. Body long, wide, deep, round and equally well balanced before and behind. (a) Back level, wide and well fleshed and slightly rounded outward, with the spinal column hidden and even depressed from the loin to the tail head. (b) Loin broad and full. (c) Underline straight. (d) Breast broad, deep, full, massive. (e) Brisket broad and well rounded. (f) Shoulder large, plump and smooth, wide above, rounded out from above, forward and below to the center; well filled before and behind and well covered. (g) Fore arm strong and well developed. (h) Crops well filled. (i) Girth good around the heart and about equally good at the hind flank. (j) Coupling short rather than long. (k) Ribs well sprung from the backbone, nicely arched and deep, not distant from one another, and coming well forward and backward. (l) Hind quarters long, broad and deep, rounded out from above and behind toward the center of the hip and broad at the buttock. (m) Twist well filled. (n) Hind flank well filled outwardly, low and thick. (o) Thigh broad and well filled within and without. (p) Tail set on smoothly and on a line with the back. (q) Skin a rich pink in color and possessed of good handling qualities. 6. Wool—The whole body should be well covered with wool characteristic of the breed. (a) It should be of uniform length and texture and (b) possessed of all the qualities essential in first class wool. 7. Legs short, straight and strong, wide apart and yet well under the body and standing firmly on hoofs of good shape and quality. 8. Appearance—The appearance should be animated and the carriage easy, proud and graceful.

Fourth.—The ewes of the mutton breeds possess the same leading essentials as to form as the rams with the following points of difference: 1. They are not so large in frame, are finer in bone and are more roomy in the coupling. 2. The head is smaller and finer and is carried less proudly. 3. The neck is longer and finer, more especially where it joins the head. 4. The twist is not quite so well filled. 5. The wool is finer in the fiber, at least in some instances.

An Incident In Which Patti Answered a Remark About Her.

To a writer in The Woman at Home Mme. Albani has been giving some details of her life. "My voice is a certain amount of care to me," she said. "You think that it always sounds fresh and clear?" Well, I watch over it and never allow it to become tired if I can help it. On the days I am engaged to sing at the opera I do not talk above a whisper for many hours beforehand, besides which I believe in careful diet. Tea I forbid myself. Bordeaux I find excellent. And sometimes, between the acts of an opera, I take, through a straw, a cup of bouillon made in the French way, which I find very restorative."

Mme. Albani could sing any tune sung to her long before she could speak. "My sister," she added, "will tell you that she distinctly remembers my first soprano note—a real note, long sustained. We were playing together in our cot in the early morning before the household were astir, and, baby though she, too, was, she has not forgotten the effect made upon her. At 8 years old I actually entered the musical profession. Ah, do not laugh! It is true. I made a little 'tournee' of some months' duration and was much petted and spoiled wherever I went. Then a few years later I was sent to be educated at a convent and engaged to take the soprano solo at a mass."

There is a good—and a true—story of how one day Adelina Patti, when walking down Regent street one morning with her first husband, the Marquis de Caux, stopped at the windows of the stereoscopic company. There were shown, side by side, photographs of herself and the debutante, Mlle. Emma Albani. Patti stood close to the window and was unnoticed by a young man lounging in the background. "Look," he exclaimed in a loud and jubilant voice, "at that photograph of Albani. She's the new prima donna, and everybody is raving over her. Patti will be nowhere very soon. That's one thing certain!" And Patti, turning round suddenly upon the speaker, made him a swift little courtesy. "Thank you, sir," she exclaimed, her eyes sparkling with mischief. The man was rooted to the spot with amazement. Patti stopped just an instant to enjoy the effect she had created and then tripped off laughing through the crowd on her way home-ward.

DAIRY AND CREAMERY.

BARREL CHURN.

This Form Is Extremely Popular In the Home Dairy.

The illustration shows a favorite form of churn where the work is all done at home by hand. Nobody who is anybody now uses the old fashioned dasher churn. It is too back breaking.

It explains itself. It swings and oscillates and brings the butter. Whether one is a believer or disbeliever in washing butter, he will stop churning when the butter is in the granular state, the size of grains of wheat. Then the buttermilk is drawn carefully off. Some good butter makers dash water cooled to 62 degrees upon the grains of butter and then turn the barrel churn over a dozen times more. Although the churns usually do not provide for it, it is well to have a strainer of somewhat coarse wire beneath the buttermilk vent to catch the lumps of butter that would otherwise go out with the milk. Some good butter makers dash brine over the butter while it is in the granular state. They claim that this both washes the butter and helps to separate better the buttermilk from it. Those who practice this say the water or brine must be just 62 degrees cold or the churning will be spoiled. Even where the brine is used the butter will need extra salt at the rate of about half an ounce to the pound. It is going out of fashion to salt butter heavily.

BARREL CHURN.

We represent the barrel churn here for the benefit of our farm dairy friends who propose to be up with the times and have not already possessed themselves of an improved churn.

Curing Cheese.

The question that I am to consider is how to cure and perfect a well made full cream cheese after it comes from the press. My opinion is that a cheese to be properly cured should be exposed to a temperature varying according to its age. For the first 12 to 15 days a temperature of 75 degrees will not injure a well made hay cheese, but for a cheese not made on hay the temperature should not go above 70 degrees nor fall below 68 degrees. From the fifteenth to the twenty-fifth day the temperature should range from 65 degrees to 68 degrees, from the twenty-fifth to the thirty-fifth day the temperature should be from 60 degrees to 65 degrees and after that not above 55 degrees.

So much for the temperature. Another consideration is the question of moist or dry air for curing rooms, and I believe in a moist air. In the beginning of the factory system the curing room was called a dryroom, and a dry-room it was in most cases, and a hot one, too, if the weather was hot and a cold room if the weather was cold. The cheeses were spread out on a Scott turner on wide-spreading racks, and a factory of large patronage had to have a pretty extensive plot of ground as a building site. Buildings of such size were expensive to build and for most part were built very cheaply and so open as to be practically out of doors. Of course they afforded shelter from the rain if the roof did not leak, as it often did after a few years, but that was about all. At the present day we all know that such a building and the curing rooms it contained were totally unfit for curing cheese. But the question is, Are we far enough away from those miserable old fashions?

The old name of dryrooms, I think, is a very great misnomer. We do not want a dryroom. We want a curing room, a moist air instead of a dry one. Cheese will be more perfect in flavor if cured in a moist air. Furthermore, just in accordance with the dryness of the room will be the thickness of the cheese shell or rind, which is a total waste, for no one cares to eat it.

Cheese cured in moist air will mold to a certain extent. Now, I know that cheesemakers are much afraid of mold. They do hate to see it on their cheese. But mold does not hurt cheese, except in appearance. Let cheesemakers put more work on their cheese. Let them rub them more and keep the mold off in that way. Do not open the cheeseroom to the outdoor air on the first appearance of a little mold. Of course at certain times and under certain conditions cheeserooms need ventilation. But on this point I would say to the cheesemaker: Stand the mold as long as you can and keep your cheese decent in appearance. If you have never tried the effect of extreme rubbing, try it.—Address of Madison Cooper.

Dropping Their G's.

The best bred men in England have the habit of habitually dropping their "g's" in words ending in "ing," such as going, running, walking, etc.

Some of the younger generation of America are horrified when they hear this thing done by older people and set it down as a mark of ignorance.

Those of them who have heard the eminent Dean Hole of England in his lectures are now surprised to find that he invariably drops his "g's," and they are looking up his authority for it. His authority is simply common usage among the university bred men of England.

It would always be done by a dean of Christchurch or a master of Trinity, who must be pretty well educated, better educated even than young American girls that guard their "g's" and frown on the old folk for dropping them.

Now that Dean Hole is on record here as a dropper of "g's" perhaps these orthoepic champions will forgive native vulgarians the same habit.—Town Topics.

ECCENTRICITIES OF DICKENS.

His Dread of Railway Traveling—Strange Mirror Antics.

In some interesting "Recollections of Charles Dickens," in The Young Man, his eldest daughter tells how, after the railway accident which befell the novelist in 1865, he often suffered from a feeling of intense dread whenever he found himself in any kind of conveyance:

"One occasion," she says, "I specially recall. While we were on our way from London to our little country station Higham, where the carriage was to meet us, my father suddenly clutched the arms of the railway carriage seat, while his face grew ashy pale, and great drops of perspiration stood upon his forehead, and though he tried to master the dread it was so strong that he had to leave the train at the next station. The accident had left its impression upon the memory, and it was destined never to be effaced."

Miss Dickens, when an invalid, was frequently carried into her father's study and lay quietly on the sofa watching the novelist at work. On these occasions she was sometimes witness of a curious proceeding in which the novelist indulged:

"Suddenly my father would jump from his chair and rush to a mirror which hung near, and in which I could see the reflection of some extraordinary facial contortions which he was making. He returned rapidly to his desk, wrote furiously for a few minutes, and then went again to the mirror. The facial pantomime was resumed, and then, turning toward but evidently not seeing me, he began talking rapidly in a low tone. Ceasing this soon, however, he returned once more to his desk, where he remained silently writing until luncheon time."

It was not till long afterward that Miss Dickens discovered that, with his natural intensity, her father had thrown himself into the character that he was creating, "and that for the time being he had not only lost sight of his surroundings, but had actually become in action, as in imagination, the personality of his pen."

The Seventeenth.

Preperations were made and carried out, and everything passed off pleasantly during the two days of sport held here Quite a number of persons arrived Sunday afternoon from Big Pine, and the attendance from the the lower end of the County was very fair, a number coming up from Keeler, Darwin and Cerro Gordo Tuesday morning. The races Tuesday afternoon drew a very fair sized audiance. The day was fair and the track was in good condition, but betting was light, although the horses were very well matched. In the first race, the quarter-mile-dash, there were four entries, Midnight of Big Pine, Quoins of Independence, Snip of Fish Springs and Gomez of Lone Pine. They were a little slow in getting off but the start was a good one, and it was a nice race. They came under the wire with Quoins about a length ahead of Midnight and Snip a close third, and Gomez, the last of the four was not very badly beaten. In the next race, the quarter mile and repeat, there were also four entries, Brownie of Big Pine, Prince of Independence, Little Billy of Fish Springs and Midget from Lone Pine. In this start Little Billy commenced to buck and did not come through with the others, but came through several minutes after and threw his rider when under the wire. Brownie won the heat with Prince second by about five feet. Midget flew the track when about half way down and her rider was unable to get her back and she did not come under the wire. In the next heat an Indian rider was put on Little Billy and the start was very fair; all coming under the wire this time with Brownie first, Midget second, Prince third and Little Billy fourth.

The event of the meeting was the half-mile and repeat race on Wednesday afternoon, between Midnight and Quoins. The former, ridden by Ed. Rose, had the pole; Quoin being ridden by Bev. Hunter. The horses got away at the first break and Midnight took the lead at once, turning into the stretch about three lengths ahead. Once straightened out for home, however, Quoin came very fast and soon had the mare in difficulties, passing her at the eighth post and beating her in handily. Quoin swerved badly in the stretch and the judges decided that it was no heat, sending the horses back to the post in the same positions. The second heat was a repetition of the first, Quoin turning into the stretch two lengths behind, soon passing the mare and winning pulled up. For the third heat the mare got several lengths the best of the start and Quoin was pulled up by his rider. They broke on the second score for the fourth heat getting away on even terms, Quoin led into the stretch by a length, but ran to to the outside of the track and the mare passed him. Quoin passed her about a neck at the eighth and from there to the finish it hammer and tongs, Quoin gaining the verdict by a neck. Time of the first heat, 50¼; second heat, 50½; third heat, no time taken; fourth heat, 53. The track was very heavy, part of the way being ankle deep in sand. From the number of heats run and the time made it was undoubtedly the greatest race ever run in the County. A race for saddle horses concluded the sport; there were three entries, Brownie, Snip and Little Billie. From Billie's bucking performance the day before he was not considered in it: he was accoutered with a vaquero saddle, with a coat tied around the horn, and his rider wore Spanish spurs with big rowels, and played them into him so hard and fast that he had no time to buck and he came on at the finish and won handily.

| Little Billie, Hunter, | 1 |
| Snip, Rose, | 2 |
| Brownie, Naylor | 3 |

Won by two lengths. No time taken.

At the pance Tuesday evening only a fair crowd was in attendance, dancing, however, was continued until nearly daylight Wednesday morning. Excellent music was furnished by the Independence String band, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed by all who participated. A social dance was held the next evening in the dining room of the Norman house, where a very fair number collected and danced until past the midnight hour.

Shrinkage In Beef Cattle.

A Nevada stockman who has been experimenting and taking notes, says beef cattle driven twenty-five miles without water will shrink fifty pounds per bullock, allowing feed and drink at the end of the journey before weighing. A bullock driven five miles and allowed to stand two hours without feed or water will not shrink any. A bullock driven fifty miles and allowed to drink frequently during the drive will shrink twenty pounds. A bullock driven twenty-five miles and allowed to drink frequently will not show shrinkage, if allowed to eat and drink for three hours at the end of the drive. A bunch of 600-pound bullocks driven fifty miles with care and allowed to drink frequently on the drive, and at the end allowed to eat and drink for six hours, showed fifteen pounds shrinkage to the animal. This, however, was the result of careful handling.

The foregoing figures were obtained by actual experiment.—Reno Gazette

Card Of Thanks.

To those who so kindly assisted us in our sad bereavement, at our home, and who expressed such kind sympathy, and assisted in the services, we wish to extend our sincere thanks.

From Aberdeen.

At last our new post-office has a new name. The Department has kept us waiting a long time before it let us know by what name we are to be known, but Col. Neil received his commission this week and hereafter he is the Alcalde of the town whose name appears above. On the whole we are just as well pleased with Aberdeen as we were with Modena. It has a more stable sound and savors of the sturdy Scotts, who have made the original Aberdeen one of the foremost cities of the United Kingdom, and we bespeak for the new Aberdeen a future second to none other city in the valley.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE.

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR" "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

A scornful glitter came into Mrs. Armour's eyes—a peculiar touch as of burnished gold, an effect of the light at a certain angle of the lens. It gave for the instant an uncanny look to the face, almost something malicious. She guessed why this woman had come. She knew the whole history of the past, and it touched her in a tender corner. She knew she was had at an advantage. Before her was a woman perfectly trained in the fine social life to which she was born, whose equanimity was as regular as her features. Herself was by nature a creature of impulse, of the woods and streams and open life. The social convention had been engrafted. As yet she was used to thinking and speaking with all candor. She was to have her training in the charms of superficiality, but that was to come, and when it came she would not be an unskillful apprentice. Perhaps the latent subtlety of her race came to help her natural candor at the moment, for she said at once in a slow, quiet tone:

"I never heard my husband speak of you. Will you sit down?"

"And Mrs. Armour and Marion are not in? No, I suppose your husband did not speak much of his old friends."

The attack was studied and cruel. But Lady Haldwell had been stung by Mrs. Armour's remark, and it piqued her that this was possible.

"Oh, yes, he spoke of some of his friends, but not of you."

"Indeed! That is strange."

"There was no necessity," said Mrs. Armour quietly.

"Of discussing me? I suppose not. But by some chance"——

"It was just as well perhaps not to anticipate the pleasure of our meeting."

Lady Haldwell was surprised. She had not expected this cleverness. They talked casually for a little time, the visitor trying in vain to delicately give the conversation a personal turn. At last, a little foolishly, she grew bolder, with a needless selfishness.

Lady Haldwell presently rose and said goodby.

"So old a friend of your husband as I am, I am hopeful you and I may be friends also."

Mrs. Armour saw the move. "You are very kind," she said conventionally and offered a cup of tea.

Lady Haldwell now ventured unwisely. She was nettled at the other's self possession. "But then in a way I have been your friend for a long time, Mrs. Armour."

The point was veiled in a vague tone, but Mrs. Armour understood. Her reply was not wanting:

"Any one who has been a friend to my husband has naturally claims upon me."

Lady Haldwell, in spite of herself, chafed. There was a subtlety in the woman before her not to be reckoned with lightly.

"And if an enemy?" she said, smiling.

A strange smile also flickered across Mrs. Armour's face as she said, "If an enemy of my husband called and was penitent, I should—offer her tea, no doubt."

"That is, in this country, but in your own country, which, I believe, is different, what would you do?"

Mrs. Armour looked steadily and coldly into her visitor's eyes. "In my country enemies do not compel us to be polite."

"By calling on you?" Lady Haldwell was growing a little reckless. "But then that is a savage country. We are different here. I suppose, however, your husband told you of these things, so that you were not surprised. And when does he come? His stay is protracted. Let me see, how long is it? Ah, yes, near four years." Here she became altogether reckless, which she regretted afterward, for she knew after all what was due herself. "He will come back, I suppose."

Lady Haldwell was no coward, else she had hesitated before speaking in that way before this woman, in whose blood was the wildness of the heroical north. Perhaps she guessed the passion in Lali's breast, perhaps not. In any case she would have said what she listed at the moment.

Wild as were the passions in Lali's breast, she thought on the instant of her child, of what Richard Armour would say, for he had often talked to her about not showing her emotions and passions, had told her that violence of all kinds was not wise or proper. Her fingers ached to grasp this beautiful, exasperating woman by the throat. But after an effort at calmness she remained still and silent, looking at her visitor with a scornful dignity. Lady Haldwell presently rose. She could not endure the furnace of that look, and said good-by. She turned toward the door. Mrs. Armour remained immovable. At that instant, however, some one stepped from behind a large screen just inside the door. It was Richard Armour. He was pale, and on his face was a sternness the like of which this and perhaps only one other woman had ever seen on him. He interrupted her.

"Lady Haldwell has a fine talent for irony," he said, "but she does not always use it wisely. In a man it would bear another name, and from a man it would be differently received." He came close to her. "You are a brave woman," he said, "or you would have been more careful. Of course you knew that my mother and sister were not at home."

She smiled languidly. "And why 'of course?' "

"I do not know that. Only I know that I think so, and I also think that my brother Frank's worst misfortune did not occur when Miss Julia Sherwood trafficked without compunction in his happiness."

"Don't be oracular, my dear Richard Armour," she said. "You are trying really. This seems almost melodramatic, and melodrama is bad enough in Drury lane."

"You are not a good friend even to yourself," he answered.

"What a discoverer you are! And how much in earnest! Do come back to the world, Mr. Armour. You would be a relief, a new sensation."

"I fancy I shall come back if only to see the 'engineer hoist with his own'—torpedo."

He paused before the last word to give it point, for her husband's father had made his money out of torpedoes. She felt the sting in spite of her, and she saw the point. "And then we will talk it over at the end of the season," he added, "and compare notes. Good afternoon."

"You stake much on your hazards," she said, glancing back at Lali, who still stood immovable. "Au revoir!"

She left the room. Richard heard the door close after her and the servant retire. Then he turned to Lali.

As he did so, she ran forward to him, with a cry. "Oh, Richard, Richard!" she said, with a sob, threw her arms over his shoulder and let her forehead drop on his breast. Then came a sudden impulse in his blood. Long after he shuddered when he remembered what he thought at that instant; what he wished to do; what rich madness possessed him. He knew now why he had come to town. He also knew why he must not stay, or, if staying, what must be his course.

He took her gently by the arm and led her to a chair, speaking cheerily to her. Then he sat down beside her, and all at once again, her face wet and burning, she flung herself forward on her knees beside him and clung to him.

"Oh, Richard, I am glad you have come," she said. I would have killed her if I had not thought of you. I want you to stay. I am always better when you are with me. I have missed you, and I know that baby misses you too."

He had his cue. He rose, trembling a little. "Come, come," he said heartily, "it's all right, it's all right—my sister. Let us go and see the youngster. There, dry your eyes and forget all about that woman. She is only envious of you. Come, for his imperial highness."

She was in a tumult of feeling. It was seldom that she had shown emotion in the past two years, and it was the more ample when it did break forth. But she dried her eyes, and together they went to the nursery. She dismissed the nurse, and they were left alone by the sleeping child. She knelt at the head of the little cot and touched the child's forehead with her lips. He stooped down also beside it.

"He's a grand little fellow," he said. "Lali," he continued presently, "it is time Frank came home. I am going to write for him. If he does not come at once, I shall go and fetch him."

"Never! Never!" Her eyes flashed angrily. "Promise that you will not. Let him come when he is ready. He does not care." She shuddered a little.

"But he will care when he comes, and you—you care for him, Lali."

Again she shuddered, and a whiteness ran under the hot excitement of her cheeks. She said nothing, but looked up at him, then dropped her face in her hands.

"You do care for him, Lali," he said earnestly, almost solemnly, his lips twitching slightly. "You must care for him. It is his right. And he will—I swear to you I know he will—care for you."

In his own mind there was another thought, a hard, strange thought, and it had to do with the possibility of his brother not caring for his wife.

Still she did not speak.

"To a good woman, with a good husband," he continued, "there is no one—there should be no one—like the father of her child. And no woman ever loved her child more than you do yours." He knew that this was special pleading.

She trembled and then dropped her cheek beside the child's. "I want Frank to be happy," he went on. "There is no one I care more for than for Frank."

She lifted her face to him now, in it a strange light. Then her look ran to confusion, and she seemed to read all that he meant to convey. He knew she did. He touched her shoulder.

She lifted her face to him now, in it a strange light.

"You must do the best you can every way, for Frank's sake, for all our sakes. I will help you—God knows I will—all I can."

"Oh, yes, yes!" she said from the child's pillow. He could see the flame in her cheek. "I understand." She put out her hand to him, but did not look up. "Leave me alone with my baby, Richard," she pleaded.

He took her hand and pressed it again and again in his old, unconscious way. Then he let it go and went slowly to the door. There he turned and looked back at her. He mastered the hot thought in him.

"God help me!" she murmured from the cot.

The next morning Richard went back to Greyhope.

CHAPTER VII.

It was hard to tell, save for a certain deliberateness of speech and a color a little more pronounced than that of a Spanish woman, that Mrs. Frank Armour had not been brought up in England. She had a kind of grave sweetness and distant charm which made her notable at any table or in any ballroom. Indeed it soon became apparent that she was to be the pleasant talk, the interest of the season. This was tolerably comforting to the Armours. Again Richard's prophecy had been fulfilled, and as he sat alone at Greyhope and read The Morning Post, noticing Lali's name at distinguished gatherings, or, picking up The World, saw how the lion hunters talked extravagantly of her, he took some satisfaction to himself that he had foreseen her triumph where others looked for her downfall. Lali herself was not elated. It gratified her, but she had been an angel, and a very unsatisfactory one, if it had not done so.

As her confidence grew (though outwardly she had never appeared to lack it greatly) she did not hesitate to speak of herself as an Indian, her country as a good country and her people as a noble if dispossessed race—all the more so if she thought reference to her nationality and past was being rather conspicuously avoided. She had asked General Armour for an interview with her husband's solicitor. This was granted. When she met the solicitor, she asked him to send no newspaper to her husband containing any reference to herself, nor yet to mention her in his letters.

She had never directly received a line from him but once, and that was after she had come to know the truth about his marriage with her. She could read in the conventional sentences, made simple as for a child, the strained politeness and his absolute silence as to whether or not a child had been born to them, the utter absence of affection for her. She had also induced General Armour and his wife to give her husband's solicitor no information regarding the birth of the child. There was thus apparently no more inducement for him to hurry back to England than there was when he had sent her off on his mission of retaliation, which had been such an ignominious failure, for the humiliation of his family had been short lived, the affront to Lady Haldwell nothing at all. The Armours had not been human if they had failed to enjoy their daughter-in-law's success. Although they never perhaps would quite recover from the disappointment concerning Lady Agnes Martling, the result was so much better than they in their cheerfullest moments dared hope for that they appeared genuinely content.

To their grandchild they were devotedly attached. Marion was his faithful slave and admirer, so much so that Captain Vidall, who now and then was permitted to see the child, declared himself jealous. He and Marion were to be married soon. The wedding had been delayed owing to his enforced absence abroad. Mrs. Edward Lambert, once Mrs. Townley, shyly regretted in Lali's presence that the child or one as sweet was not hers. Her husband evidently shared her opinion from the extraordinary notice he took of it when his wife was not present. Not that Richard Joseph Armour, Jr., was always en evidence, but when asked for by his faithful friends and admirers he was amiably produced.

Because He Stared at Her.

Lady Frances Wilson, daughter of Lord Aylesbury, was one day informed that a man who had recently died in a Pimlico lodging had left her a valuable estate in Hants. Incredulous, she went up to town and recognized there the remains of a man who had very frequently annoyed her by staring at her at the opera. The same man had also bequeathed £4,000 to the speaker of the house of commons and £1,000 to the chancellor of the exchequer, neither of whom had been aware of his existence.

THE WORST OF IT.

If the best of life, as it is said to be, is but anticipation, the worst of it is surely worry and vexation. They are the plows and harrows that furrow the brow and cut deeply into the nerves. It is constant plowing of this kind that tears up the nerve tissues. The greater nerves, like the bigger roots, may resist for a time, but the ploughshare gets down to them. Worry brings all sorts of other ailments of a torn-up system and at last the sciatic nerve is reached, a disturbance to which in the form of sciatica is attended by excruciating pains. St. Jacobs Oil has cured the worst cases of men crippled by it. Use it and make sure of a prompt and permanent cure.

Throat Paralysis.

(From the Courier-Herald, Saginaw, Mich.)

It was publicly talked all over Clare County, Mich., for some time before the Courier-Herald sent a reporter to Dover to fully investigate the Coulter matter. He finally went, and we publish today his full report. The Coulters are prominent people, though Mrs. C. in response to the question whether she objected to being interviewed, said, "Certainly not." Her story follows:

"About 14 years ago we decided to take up our abode in Dover and everything went along smoothly for several years, business progressed and being of a saving temperament we accumulated quite an amount. Our family increased as the years rolled by and we now have 5 children living, the oldest 15, youngest 3, but sickness made its way into our household, and doctors' bills flooded upon us, until we have nothing left but our home, and these sweet children. Everything went to satisfy the claims of physicians.

"About 3 years ago I had a miserable feeling at the back of my ears, my right hand became paralyzed and the paralysis extended to my arm and throat, and would affect my head and eyes, sometimes for days I would lose my sight, my face was deformed, lifeless as it were, my nose was drawn to one side and I presented a pitiable appearance and never expecting to regain my natural facial expressions. I employed the best physicians that could be procured expending thousands of dollars for their services but could not obtain relief. At last, they stated my case was beyond the reach of medical skill, and it would be but a short time until the end would come. This certainly was not very encouraging to me, but I never gave up hope. In connection with receiving the attendance of physicians I have tried every medicine known to the apothecary but never received any relief until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People came to my assistance. Before I had taken half of the first box the deformity in my face had left me, and before four boxes had been consumed the paralysis had disappeared entirely and much to my surprise I felt like a new woman. I have not taken any medicine since last spring, just about a year ago and my trouble has not appeared since. I owe my health, my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"A short time since my little boy John was afflicted with St. Vitus' dance. He could not walk across the room without assistance, in fact he would fall all over himself, but after takng a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, St. Vitus' dance entirely left him, and no trace of the affliction is left. These Pills are worth their weight in gold. You may say in this connection that I am wifling at any time to make affidavit to the truth of these statements, and furthermore I will answer any comumnication concerning my case, as I consider it nothing more than right and just that I should assist suffering humanity."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Amusing Slips of the Tongue.

A young clergyman in giving out the hymn, "Conquering Kings," merely stumbled over the first syllable, but being unable to save himself startled his congregation with the announcement, "The hymn tonight will be 'Kinquering Congs'—'Kinquering Congs.' "

Much the same was the pitfall into which a reverend gentleman walked when in place of saying, "Behold the fig tree, how it withereth away!" by a simple transposition of two or three letters asked his audience to "Behold the wig tree, how it fithereth away!"

But perhaps one of the most comical instances of slips of this kind is the case of the preacher who, describing conscience and desiring to get his listeners to recognize the promptings of its inward voice in the half formed wishes of the mind, appealed to them whether there was one there who at one time or another "had not felt within him the effect of a half warmed fish."

After this, the instance of a person who, devoutly reading the lessons in solemn tones, announced, "He spake the word, and cattlehoppers came and grassipillars innumerable," seems almost commonplace. So, too, does the mistake of the priest who assured his congregation that "it was easier for a rich man to pass through the eye of a needle than for a camel to enter the kingdom of God."—Boston Herald.

A POPULIST MOSES.

Cousin of President Lincoln Stumping Southeastern Kansas.

Colonel C. A. Lincoln, a cousin of Abraham Lincoln, is the Populist Moses just now who is electrifying audiences in southeastern Kansas. Until recently he was a poor farmer in Cowley county. Last week he espoused the Populist faith and announced 100 meetings in schoolhouses in Bourbon county.

He assumes the commonplace characteristics of "Old Abe" and drives a little bay mare which he says he has driven three times across the continent, making a total of 35,000 miles.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Truth of It.

Willey—I tell you, it's better in the end to be honest. Did you ever know a rogue who wasn't unhappy?

Shalley—No; but, then, one would hardly expect a rogue to be happy when he is known. It's the rogues who are not known that are happy.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Fits Cured

(From U.S. Journal of Medicine)

Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferers who may send their P. O. and Express address. We advise any one wishing a cure to address Prof. W. H. PEEKE, F. D., 4 Cedar St., New York

A BRITISH ALLIANCE.

Rumor That William Waldorf Astor Is to Marry Lady Churchill.

They say now that it is Lady Randolph Churchill on whom Willie Wallie Astor is about to confer his name, his Spanish ancestors and a share of his enormous estate.

It seems a good and reasonable match enough, but rumor has always had it that Lady Randolph long since gave her heart to another—to the young guardsman whom she nursed so tenderly through the consequences of a severe accident.

Willie Wallie would indeed be fortunate to capture such a prize, for Lady Randolph is still young—near 41—clever as they make 'em and with an excellently well assured position in English society.

But, then, this is only rumor, which may be very wide of the mark and may flatter Willie Wallie's vanity to an inordinate degree.—Cholly Knickerbocker in New York Recorder.

A WATERY SUBJECT.

Bathing Ethics Troubling Folk In Parts of Illinois.

While the authorities at Washington are struggling with the Venezuelan question the Illinois state authorities at Lansing are having troubles of their own. Here is a question which a blushing young schoolma'am, residing in an interior county, has submitted in good faith to Superintendent Pattengill:

"Which should take a bath the oftener—the farmer or the student? If you think that the student ought to, please give your reason why."

The schoolma'am explained that her pupils had been unable to solve the question. The question remains unanswered pending the return of Professor Pattengill to the city, and in the meantime both the farmer and the students doubtless grace the ranks of the great army of the unwashed.

The Intelligent Voter.

A correspondent of The British Weekly had some odd experiences in a county council election some time ago in a rural district of England. "The names of the candidates were Mr. Hook and Colonel Holland. 'Ah, well,' said a man to me, after I had been expatiating on the merits of one of them, 'I don't know nothing about 'Ook, and I don't know nothing about 'Olland, but my wife's a Dutchwoman, and so I mean to vote for 'Olland.' "

A Gentle Hint.

Miss Perksby—Goodness gracious! Aren't you afraid it will overtake you before you get home?—Brooklyn Eagle.

SAILING AWAY.

Sailing away with the wind abeam,
And the wide, wide sea before;
Sailing away in a lover's dream
To the port of the golden shore,
Idle hands on the rudder bands,
Hope in the sunrise fair,
And hearts as light as the sea bird white
Afloat in the morning air.

Love, in the dawn of that faroff time,
Did you guess of the weary way?
Dearest, when life seemed a summer rhyme,
Could we tell where we went astray?
Silent tears through the coming years,
Darkness for you and me,
And doubt and dread of the wilds ahead
Fell chill as we sailed a-sea.

Sailing ashore with a waning wind
On the glass of a dreaming tide,
Leaving the dark of the deep behind
For the light of the other side,
Loosen hands from the rudder bands!
Ah, to the margin foam
Comes breath of land o'er the golden sand.
Oh, sweet is our welcome home!
—William Woodward in Chambers' Journal.

A BICYCLE CHASE.

Milo Warren was making a call on a girl to whom he was fondly attached, although he had never told her so. But this was a case where actions speak louder than words, and—leave a girl alone for finding out if a young man regards her with favor. Every girl is clairvoyant where affairs of the heart are concerned.

They were talking about their birthdays and the pleasant custom of giving presents at such a time.

"Let me see," said Milo thoughtfully, "did you say your birthday came in September, Miss Nellie?"

"I did not say," remarked Miss Nellie demurely.

"Then it was December, wasn't it? Some lucky fellow will be giving you a diamond, perhaps."

"Or a souvenir spoon," laughed Nellie. "You know they made jewel spoons for birthday gifts, but all the girls changed their birthdays to December, and the young men could not stand the expense, and they sent a petition to the manufacturers, asking them to discontinue the custom; so no more spoons are in the market."

"I—I—I—really wish you would tell me when your natal day arrives. I might at least send you a bunch of roses, in remembrance of all the—the—happy days we have spent together. Is it this month, Miss Nellie?"

"You remind me of the parlor game, 'Is it this? Is it that?'" said Miss Nellie, and then fearing that the young man was becoming sentimental she turned the conversation to other subjects.

But the next day Milo Warren dropped casually into the store where Miss Nellie Newton's best brother was engaged as bookkeeper and inquired solemnly at the grated window which permitted a segment of his countenance to appear if that young man would take lunch with him.

"Certainly," was the brusque reply from a mouth full of pens. "I'll meet thee at Philippi—I mean at Hunger & Co.'s—in an hour."

He was there, and at the pleasant spread of good things provided Milo Warren propounded this conundrum:

"If you like a girl awfully, but haven't told her so, and you think she maybe likes you awfully—no, I don't mean that—but if that girl has a birthday and you want to make her a present, and she won't tell you when it is—the birthday, you know—oh, hang it all, I'm everlastingly mixed up. Can't you help a fellow out?"

Lyman Newton laid aside his knife and fork and looking Milo in the face, asked seriously:

"Any insanity in your family, Milo?"

"None that I ever heard of outside of my own case," was the depressed answer.

"Reducing your heroics to a plain statement, then, you want to give a girl of your acquaintance a birthday present?"

"Exactly."

"Is she an 'old woman?'"

"What do you mean?" roared Warren, turning red. "I'll thank you to speak with respect of my friends—besides I"—

"Oh, no harm done; don't get riled so easily. I wanted to know if she belonged to the past age or the present. I take it, then, that she's a 'new woman?'"

"I understand now. Yes, I believe she has advanced opinions, but she isn't one of those dreadful creatures that advocate the wearing of bloomers. Nellie is the soul of womanly modesty and"—

"Nellie? Do I know this bright particular star?"

"Why, of course you do—I quite forgot—she's your own sister!"

"Well, I like that! And you want to make her a birthday present and don't know the day. Sorry, old fellow, but I can't help you out. Nellie would take my head off if I told."

That ended the lunch, but an unforeseen thing happened. Just as Milo Warren left his company at the corner he saw an urchin he knew. It was the infliction known as Nellie's youngest brother, aged 7, capacity for mischief seven times seven, precocity unlimited by any period of time.

Milo, with malice prepense, engaged the dear child in a surfeit of sweets, and then asked, as if the idea was not of the least consequence and had just occurred to him:

"When does sister Nellie have a birthday?"

The dear child looked at him for a moment, drew his mouth round under his ear, elevated both eyebrows and said in a confiding, infantile voice:

"What'll you give ter know?"

Advantageous terms being made, the boy puckered his mouth for a whistle, thought better of it and gave the following Saturday as his sister's birthday.

"An if yer want to make yerself solid—see, just send her a real stunner of a bike."

"What! A bicycle? Does she ride?"

"How kin she? I reckon she kin learn, mister. Yer just send that bike—there ain't nothin Nell wants wuss nor that."

With this advice and being sworn to secrecy, the small terror bowled himself off.

It gave Milo Warren something to do to purchase that bicycle and have it delivered to Miss Nellie on her birthday in an anonymous manner. He expected it back every hour for about a week, but it did not come, and he felt safe. The small brother had not betrayed him after all.

But after a little he began to wish he had, for Miss Nellie had evidently mounted that bicycle and ridden out of his life. He called, but she was out on her bicycle, no matter what the hour was, noon or night, and he got himself run over on the street and knocked down daily by dashing out from sidewalk corners to see who the rider was and getting hurt for his pains. When he could stand it no longer, he came to a sudden resolve—he would buy a bicycle for himself and perhaps be able to find Nellie.

And now began an exciting chase for life and liberty, for at one moment the amateur bicyclist was under the feet of a trampling horse, the next he was running over a wrathy pedestrian, and he usually ended his experiences by picking up his frisky steed and carrying it to the shop for repairs.

And all this time he never caught a glimpse of Nellie, but he was inclined to think he divined the cause. Judging from his own experience in learning to ride a bicycle, Nellie might be exercising her own fractious acquisition on some remote roadway outside the city limits—or, dreadful thought, might even be laid up herself for repairs. He called on the bookkeeper brother, but found him busy and noncommittal. So he waited and tried to possess his soul with patience and learn to ride a bicycle without the zigzag motion that had endangered the lives of the populace and nearly caused his arrest by the police.

Then he made the discovery that if he gave his wheel its head it would behave much better than when he guided it carefully, to the end that it traversed both sides of the street at once. After acting like a thing possessed it learned to behave, and he found himself skimming along like a bird on the wing, with an exultant sense of freedom and delight, and he longed to see Nellie and tell her what he had been trying to say for months—that he loved her!

And at that moment there whizzed past him a vision in bloomers, one of those dreadful new women of whom he had heard and now was to see. He almost felt that it was disloyalty to gentle little Nellie to even look at such an apparition, but somehow she looked so quaint in her saucy jacket and baggy trousers, her neatly gaitered feet were so pert and independent, that Milo looked and looked again. Then he gave a great whoop and took after the flying wheel like a streak of lightning.

His confidence stood him instead of skill. He went spinning along in fine style until he reached a parallel with the girl in bloomers, then he leaned over to speak to her, toppled and fell in a heap, but not before he had gasped, "Nellie!"

That young lady skillfully eluded the wreck, made a fancy run and turn, and as Milo gathered himself up, said pleasantly:

"Why, Mr. Warren, I didn't know that you rode a wheel."

"I don't," said the young man ruefully, feeling of his elbow to determine whether it was dislocated or merely abraded, "but you, Miss Nellie, are quite an expert."

Miss Nellie murmured something about the wheel being a present from her brother, and that she had not cared to ride, but did just to please him.

"But you ought to see my little brother ride," she said, with enthusiasm. "He rides the wheel when I am not using it, and he makes it spin. Why, he rides standing up, and I'm afraid something will happen to him."

Milo was walking along, leading his wheel, as if he preferred that way, and Miss Nellie gave him several exhibitions of her skill, and each moment made a stronger and more lasting impression on the poor fellow's heart. But even bicycle courtship comes to an end, and they were at Nellie's home, and he must leave her, unless—he asked for a glass of water, and before it was brought he sat down with the wheel on the sidewalk. It was a sudden and most effective stroke of art. Nellie cried and asked if he was killed anywhere. Mrs. Newton brought camphor. They got him into the house, and then he was able to speak, and said what was true enough—that he had lost his head for a moment.

The two most expert cyclists on the avenue are Milo and Nellie. You will recognize her by her brown bloomer suit, which is much admired, and him by the glad smile which mantles his expressive countenance. Nellie knows now who gave her the wheel, and Milo has had another example of the total depravity of the small brother. Nellie's birthday comes in January, but to expedite matters the imp changed it to July. However, all's well that ends well.—Mrs. M. L. Rayne in Detroit Free Press.

HOW TO TRAVEL FREE

IT IS EASY, SAYS A GLOBE TROTTER WHO HAS BEEN THERE.

His Account of a 50,000 Mile Journey Without Money, Passes or Influence, Riding on Brake Beams and the Tops of Coaches—How He Worked It.

The "night shift" was waiting to relieve the "day gang," and as these veteran railroaders loitered about the Lake Shore yard office at Forty-third street they fell a-telling stories.

They drifted around to the subject of "dead heading" and some one spoke of the habit foreign noblemen have of starting penniless to encircle the globe. One after another gave his opinion of the practice. At last an old "switchie" took his turn. He said:

"If I had some one to back me and there was anything in it, I believe I could make a trip of 100,000 miles, never miss a meal or handle a cent of money, complete the distance inside of a year and get back with clothes as good as, if not better, than I have now, and I wouldn't work a day."

This brought up a lot of argument, but the man continued:

"How much worse would that be than the trip my partner and myself have just made? A year ago last May the coal strike down in West Virginia put us on 'the hog train,' and since then I can prove that we have traveled a distance that altogether would make over two trips around the world. Of course most of the trip has been on land and over railroads, but we have found water just as easy when we wanted to travel that way.

"We started for China to go railroading out there, and got as far as Liverpool on the trip when Jack backed out and we 'stowed away' and came back. On the trip over a captain on one of the cattleboats carried us on a card, but the man coming back didn't recognize letters and we had to 'make a sneak.' When we landed, we hadn't a cent, but that cut little figure. We had to have work, and we had to go to some place where business was good, so we made a start. We got out of New York over the New York Central to Buffalo and the Lake Shore from there to Chicago. The big strike had just started when we got here, and as we didn't want any 'scab' job we didn't stay here long. We went south to New Orleans, and from there to the Pacific coast over the Southern Pacific and came back east over the Santa Fe.

"The Santa Fe was the only tough streak we struck. Why, the men out there have got the 'marble heart' in its worst form. They won't carry you in a caboose or on a passenger train without a pass, and that the officials won't give you, so you have to watch your chance and 'ride the rods.' I am not much stuck on riding underneath a train. It's liable to induce nervous prostration, but if it has to be done to get over a road I can do it.

"On the new big box cars the truss rods hang a foot and a half below the body of the car and it's an easy matter to grab the slide iron of the door and swing yourself under. If you can't fix yourself comfortably on the rods, why, you can work along toward the end of the car and lower yourself down to the brake beam."

"How do you get on top of a passenger train?" he was asked.

"That's easy enough. Just watch your chance and when the train is about ready to leave pick two cars—the baggage cars are the best, because no one is watching them generally—stand up on the brake wheel and you can reach the top of the cars. If you have strength enough it is an easy matter to swing yourself up, and, once up there, you can, if you keep quiet, ride till daylight. You have to lie down flat to hang on, but that is not bad, because if you sat up or stood up the cinders from the engine would cut your face and hands to pieces. They come back across the top of the cars like birdshot out of a gun, and with almost as much force.

"If you have nerve enough you can stow yourself away on the truck of a passenger car so no one can see you. I have done it, and rode over 200 miles before I was caught. For that job you want a little board about six inches wide and a foot long, with two cleats in the middle on one side. Then find your four wheel truck—a six wheeler won't do because you can't get inside—get on the side of the track opposite the depot, and as she starts to pull out grab a truss rod with one hand and a corner of the truck with the other and slide in on the brake beam feet first.

"Bolted to the middle of the brake beam and reaching from front to rear is the brake rod. Put your 'ticket' (the little board) on the brake rod, the cleats will hold it in place, put your feet on the back brake beam and your back against the center beam of the truck, and you can ride almost as comfortably as you could 'up stairs' in a seat. You are in behind the wheels, and it will take a pretty sharp eye to find you if you keep quiet. Oh, I tell you a man can do a heap of traveling on nothing if he is a hustler.

"Since we started my partner and I have been in every state and territory of the United States, and I figured it up last night, and we have traveled over 50,000 miles, and if there has been any one time that we have had over a dollar I don't recollect it."

"How did you get food on that kind of a trip?" asked a listener.

"Sometimes the boys were good and would 'throw a meal into you,' but if they didn't, why there was nothing else to do only to 'hit a back door' and try to 'batter out' a 'lump.' It sounds tough, but I've had it to do several times in the last year. I tell you when I get to work steady I'm going to sink my dough, and when I get enough I'll go to some new country and get me a piece of land. Railroading is getting to be too much of a 'hot foot' job for me."—Chicago Record.

TRANSFORMING FEATURES.

Hideous Become Beautiful Under the Skill of the Human Sculptor.

What seem to be almost miracles are now performed in the operations of plastic and dental surgery. If a man is not satisfied with his nose; if it be too much of a Roman to suit his face, he can have it made over into a delicate Grecian.

As regards the face, the hare lip is the most common defect. This trouble is due to the failure of union between the margins of the maxillary and the front nasal bone. It not only causes a total disfigurement of the face, but it makes speaking an unpleasant matter, both for the speaker and the hearer. The defect is ordinarily seen in the upper lip, and is often double, the lip on both sides of the center being painfully drawn up. Bad as it looks and inconvenient as it is, the remedy is as simple as can be imagined. It merely consists of a triangular incision made under the nostril. A silk ligature is then put through the incision and drawn downward. This inverts the flap and brings together the opposing surfaces, which may at once be secured with sutures. A slight projection is left on the border of the lip, but it soon disappears. The operation for the double hare lip is practically the same, simply entailing a little more work for the knife. The hare lip deformity is seldom found on the lower lip, and when it is it extends down on the chin, practically dividing it. This, however, can be remedied as easily as the other.

Next to the hare lip in the line of frequency comes the absence or the deformity of the nose as a congenial defect. In the making of the nasal organ plastic surgery has achieved wonders.

STRAIGHTENING A PUG NOSE.

The bow in a Roman nose can be effectually reduced. This operation is performed entirely from the inside. The instrument is introduced into the nostril and the bone cut away, great care being taken not to fracture the skin. The surplus cuticle readily contracts, and, accommodating itself to the reduced space, it is required to cover, the bridge of the nose is left entirely smooth on the surface, while a straight and comely organ has been produced. The same operation can be performed on a pug or upturned nose. This work is also done from the inside. Enough of the cartilage on the tip is taken away to reduce the excessive protuberance and the same result as in the case of the bow is attained.

But the making of a new nose to take the place of the missing one is a different matter. It is easy to form the organ in any shape or size desired out of celluloid or aluminum, or even pasteboard, and have them fastened by adhesion or held on by spectacles, but they are not good noses. The owner cannot blow them, and if some one should, in a moment of excessive hilarity, tweak one, it would be likely to come off. Surgeons, however, now make noses that perform all the functions of the natural organs. After the solid portion is completed it is, of course, necessary to have it covered with cuticle. This is done in various ways. The most ordinary manner is to cut a triangle of skin from the forehead and bring it down over the false bridge. The edges are inserted in slits made on each side, when, in the course of time, being alive and retaining life from the natural circulation of the blood, the piece grows fast and a perfect nose is the result.

Another cause of the defects in the mouth or the jaws is the absence of the proper number of teeth or in having too many. But whatever the trouble may be the expert dental surgeon can remove it, and a distorted, homely face can be made into a fairly good-looking one. Experts says the best time to operate on such a deformity, in the case of children, is between the ages of 10 and 14 years.

While the field for the dentist is not so extended as with the general surgeon, the progress made in his profession is so pronounced and has brought as much joy to humanity as has the former. Changes in the human face have been wrought by the dental surgeon that seem almost beyond belief, and when to-day a person is seen in society with any deformity of the teeth it is safe to say that the parents were either indifferent to the matter or were unable to have the proper care taken in time, or perhaps they were ignorant of the possibilities science offers.

A GOVERNOR'S FIRST OFFICE.

Elected Attorney General Because He Wasn't a Lawyer.

Gov. Culberson, of Texas, tells the following story of how he entered politics and obtained his first office, attorney general of the Lone Star State:

"I had been practicing law," he says, "and thought I had made about enough reputation to justify branching out. I did not expect to be nominated, but I thought it would be a good introduction to start with a race for the attorney generalship. George Clark, one of the ablest lawyers in the country, was my opponent. He was placed in nomination by a brilliant speech, while my friend who proposed my name neglected to mention my legal attainments. It looked dark for me when a man from the panhandle arose and said: 'Mr. Speaker, they say Clark's a great lawyer. I come with proxies from my end of the State all in my pocket, an' was notified to vote for Clark. But I know no one had any idee he was a lawyer. This State has been hogswaggled by the lawyers till she's so pore you can't sell enough cotton to pay for the cattle the cactus kills, all on account of the lawyers, and the railroads that keeps them up. I hope we won't put in any lawyer, and I'm for Culberson. Nobody's ever accused him of being a lawyer.' That speeech resulted in my nomination."

RUSSIAN GOLD.

The War Chest from Which She Offered Millions to the United States.

Some surprise and a good deal of incredulity has been expressed over the alleged offer of Russia to loan this country a large sum in gold. The amount has been variously given as $60,000,000 and $400,000,000, and it has also been stated that the loan was not tendered recently, but in 1893. The historic friendship of Russia for this country is cited as proof of the truth of the story.

Russia is usually looked upon as a poor country and of limited revenues, notwithstanding its great extent of territory and millions of inhabitants. This is a long way from the truth, however. It is true that its natural resources are largely undeveloped and that it remains still almost wholly an agricultural country. But the people are so frugal and the resources so well husbanded that the country is capable of yielding a large revenue. The public income for 1895 is estimated at 1,214,378,030 roubles, having almost doubled since 1883, when the income was 698,980,983 roubles. The internal taxes are collected in paper, but much of the customs dues are paid in gold. The value of the paper rouble is about 50 cents in our money, while the gold rouble is valued at about 77 cents. But as only about one-tenth of the revenue is from customs, it is safe to put the yearly income of the government at a little over $600,000,000.

It is true that Russia has an enormous public debt, but it is difficult to estimate the exact amount. In 1893 it was computed at $2,750,000,000, or about the debt this country owed at the close of the war of the rebellion. It has increased since, as the Russian treasury is constantly meeting any deficit in the revenue by making a new loan.

But it is in the accumulation of its war chest that the most interest is felt just now. When Russia emerged from the war with Turkey in 1878, it was with the determination never again to begin a conflict with a foreign power without being amply prepared for it in a financial sense. The lack of money was her embarrassment in the Crimean war of 1854, but she failed to profit by the lesson. The second lesson taught her twenty-four years later seemed to have made an impression on the mind of Russian statesmen, for they at once adopted a policy of accumulation, which has been persisted in ever since. Paper money might serve the government at home, but it would be of no use abroad, especially in case of war. So the contents of this war chest are known to consist only of gold and its size is something startling. The amount held at home is believed to be equal to $475,000,000, while abroad nearly as much more is safely invested and ready to be called almost at a moment's notice. It is from this war chest containing altogether $800,000,000 that Russia probably offered to let this government have a large sum.

Turpentine for Worms.

If turpentine is given to lambs for worms, let it be done after a twenty-four hours' fast, and when the first stomach is empty. It is not unlikely that the whole flock is affected if we find worms in one. The turpentine and linseed oil can be administered with milk, or the trupentine poured upon the salt allowed them; they will eat it readily.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

NOVELTIES IN LANTERNS.

Some New Box Designs Which Any Boy Can Easily Make.

The Chinese feast of lanterns does not take place until September, at the time of the harvest moon, but it is not saying much for an American boy that he can get ahead of a Chinaman. So it happens that grocers and tobacconists are now besieged for cigar boxes, and the demand for tissue paper has already produced a scarcity of desirable colors in the market.

Last year a boy in the eastern district excited the admiration of his fellows by making a lantern of a large gourd which grew in his back yard. The idea was not new, as any boy who has been in the country could testify, though pumpkins or squash are the vegetables generally employed. However, this gourd was especially effective by reason of the beautiful markings, the green showing in dark lines against the clear yellow. By means of a small wax candle such as is sold for Christmas trees, the gourd lasted several nights without withering.

But most city children must be content with box lanterns. By taking two cigar boxes, the size which holds 50 cigars, opening the lids and forming a cube, a lantern double the ordinary size may be made. Of course it will be necessary to cut a board for the top and base, the former having a circular or square hole for air. Four such boxes will make a handsome cross lantern. Take the lids off and turn the boxes so that they open inside the figure. The lids will supply boards for the top and base.

For a gourd lantern the best ornamentation is a face, and by cutting the rind very thin in some places and leaving it thick in others excellent effects may be made with light and shadow. With box lanterns the idea of a stencil should be employed. Mark the figure you wish to have. The best way is to draw it on paper and paste the drawing on the wood. Then cut the lines in dashes not entirely out. Circles are pretty for corner ornaments. These are easily made by using a coin for drawing the ring, burning a hole in the center and enlarging it with a penknife.

The designs here given are some which The Eagle artist has drawn expressly. They are simple and effective.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Boy Was Right.

Schoolteacher, examining the class, lights on the youngest, and is so struck with his intelligent aspect that he questions him forthwith. "Now, my little man, what do five and two make?" The little one remained silent. "Well, suppose, now, I were to give you five rabbits today and two more tomorrow, how many rabbits would you possess?"

"Eight!" replied the juvenile promptly.

"Eight! Why? How do you make that out?"

"'Cause I've got one at home already." It was quite true, and the teacher had to try again.—London Telegraph.

He Wanted to Know.

At a small school the pupils were not long since reading the story of an important battle. The text read:

"Both sides fought with dogged pertinacity."

When this point was reached, a boy in one of the back seats raised his hand and calmly inquired of the master:

"What kind of weapons are those?"—San Francisco Examiner.

Jack Knew.

Governess—Now, Jack, if I were to give 12 pears to Maud, 10 to Edith and three to you, what would that be?

Jack (aged 6)—It wouldn't be fair.—London Tit-Bits.

Labor at the Transvaal Mines.

The unskilled laborers in the Transvaal mines are almost entirely negroes. According to the last report of the Johannesburg Chamber of Mines which has been issued, there were at work in the mines of the Witwatersrand 6,500 white men and 43,000 black men. The employees of the first rank—mine managers, superintendents, engineers and the like—are largely Americans. Many of these have more practical than theoretical knowledge, and have worked their way up from the position of simple miner or mine foreman. Although they are generally capable men and perform their duties well, there is a tendency to become slaves to routine. Under them are the mechanics who operate the machinery of the mines and mills and the shift-bosses who direct the work of the negroes in the mine. These men are for the most part Cornishmen or Australians; they are paid on an average about $5 per day. They live generally near the mines in buildings put up for the purpose. The black laborers are lodged in "compounds" of the different companies, which are usually barracks or huts built around an open square. They have full liberty to come and go outside of their working hours and use it freely, especially to buy the gin and whiskey which are sold at numerous drinking shops scattered along the whole length of the Rand. The mining companies, with good reason, have asked the government to reduce the number of these shops or suppress them altogether. Too often the negro passes his Sunday in imbibing the abominable alcoholic compounds which these shops furnish him, and Monday morning finds him unfit for work. The question of negro labor is a most important one for the mines of the Witwatersrand. Even before the recent troubles they were short of the full number needed by a fourth or fifth; that is, from 12,000 15,000 more "boys," as the black workmen are called, could have been profitably employed. Naturally the greatest lack was to be found in the newer mines. The older mines of the central part of the district were the best supplied, partly because the negroes who have been in the district before and return to work prefer a mine they know, provided they have been well treated there, and partly because newcomers arriving at Johannesberg are taken up by the nearest mines It seems extraordinary that in a country like the Transvaal, which has a black population of 600,000, and which borders on Natal with 450,000, Cape Colony with 1,500,000, the Portuguese territories and the Chartered Company's domain with several million more, it should be so difficult to obtain some 50,000 or 60,000 laborers. The wages are usually $15 a month, with board and lodging, for eight hours' work a day, which seems enough to attract men. The trouble is that the negro has few wants. The chief motive which brings him to work in the mine is the desire to buy a wife. That done, he makes her work for him while he passes his time sleeping in his Kraal, smoking and chattering with his companions. Besides his wife he may have bought a high hat and an umbrella. Furnished with these emblems of civilization he lives content, having realized all his wishes, until he thinks it is time to take a second wife, for the negress does not long retain the charms of her first youth. He may then, perhaps, go back to the mine for a few months. This conception of life may, after all, be defended from the philosophic point of view; but it is not one favorable to the industrial development of the country. The laborers on the Witwatersrand come from the Transvaal itself, from Basutoland, from the Cape Colony and the Portuguese territory. The Zulus of Natal and Zululand are the handsomest, the strongest and the most intelligent of all the negro races of South Africa, but they dislike underground work. The Cape negroes and the Basutos are the most civilized, many being able to read, and being, at least nominally, Christians; but they are not as good workers as those from the north of the Transvaal. The best laborers of all are the Mozambique men, the subjects of the Chief Gungunhana, whose wars with the Portuguese have been one cause of the present scarcity of laborers. The men of the different tribes do not agree, and there are frequent quarrels and sometimes fights in which a number may be disabled, to the great disgust of the shift bosses. Agents are employed by the Companies to collect laborers. They are paid so much a head, the price at times being as high as $5. The agents are generally quite unscrupulous, and resort to all sorts of devices to steal "boys" from each other. An evil of considerable dimensions is found in the frequent robberies of men who are returning home with their savings. If the roads were better guarded and such robberies prevented it would remove one cause which now deters men from coming to work, since they are naturally unwilling to risk the loss of the money for which they may have worked for months. The Government has been urged to repeal the law known as the "Plakkers-Wet," which prohibits the residence of more than five negro families on one of the farms into which the Transvaal is devided. This law prevents the formation of negro villages on the veldt in the neighborhood of the Witwatersrand. Now, the Kafirs especially will go to work in a mine muce morh willingly if it is near their own village. Thus, in the DeKaap district, which is in a negro country, plenty of men can be had, though the mines pay only $10 a month, while $15 is the rule on the Witwatersrand. With the better keeping of the roads, a strict enforcement of labor contracts and the repeal the Plakkers-Wet it would seem that the powers of Government would be exhausted. Doubtless some mine managers and speculators would like to see the formation of slave gangs, such as the Spaniards had in Peru, but the method which gave rise to so many abuses in South America in the sixteenth century would not be possible or tolerated in Africa in the nineteenth. Several propositions have been made to import laborers from abroad, and Asiatics have been suggested. In the Cape Colony, Hindoos and Malays are numerous, and in Natal there are almost as many Hindoos as Europeans, and their presence has given rise to serious race conflicts. Moreover, the Hindoos are not good miners, and the considerable number who have found their way to Jonannesburg are all engaged in trading or other occupations—not in the mines. Chinese immigration is forbidden, and and no one desires to open the way for the Mongolian influx which has caused so much trouble in California and Australia, and which threatens to overwhelm some of the colonies of the East. Moreover, it seems already quite hard enough to make the Boers, the English and the negroes live together in peace, without further complicating the situation by the introduction of the Asiatic element. As a last resort the introduction of low-priced labor from the south of Europe is proposed. Doubtless plenty of Italians, especially from the sulphur mines of Sicily, could be obtained, and for a time they would work at a low price, and would certainly make good miners. Living on the Witwatersrand is expensive for Europeans however, and the Sicilian, sober as he is, and simple in his wants and habits, would hardly be willing to work long for 75c. or $1 a day when he found his English neighbors receiving five or six times as much. The result would probably be labor troubles and strikes, from which the Witwatersrand has so far been free. The only solution seems to be to wait until the measures suggested can be secured, and perhaps until the negro has been so far civilized that his increasing wants will force him to become a steadier laborer. Unfortunately, the situation has been seriously aggravated by the recent attempt at revolutionn. The negro "boys" in January left by thousands, and the bureaus were besiged by them for the passes which they have to present when they leave for their homes. It is to be feared that their accounts of the troubles will deter others from coming to take their places. A considerable number of the Cornish miners also left, some of them fearing the prospects of civil war, while others were actualy discharged because they would not consent to take arms for the so-called "reform" movement. The attempt at revolution seriously disturbed the mining industry. Thanks to the discipline and discretion of the Boers, no injury was done to mining property, but those managers who used the funds of their companies in aiding a political movement and who have crippled their working forces by a proscriptive policy toward the employees who declined to join them, should be strictly held to account by the stockholders for their actions. The Transvaal Government is now master of the situation, and has shown its magnaminity by its treatment of Jameson and his men. It cannot be blamed if it treats the members of the Reform Committee with the utmost strictness—New York, Engineering and Mining Journal.

Notice of Executor's Sale

NOTICE IS HESEBY GIVEN THAT IN PURSUANCE of a power to sell, contained in the Last Will and Testament of John Allen Hannah, deceased, (which last will and testament was duly admitted to probate,) the undersigned, the Executor of the last will and Testament of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder for cash, lawful money of the United States, and subject to conformation by the superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on and after TUESDAY, the 3rd day of March 1896, and within six months thereafter, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Allen Hannah deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right title and interest that the said estate of John Allen Hannah, deceased has, by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than or in addition to, that of the said John Allen Hannah at the time of his death, in and to those those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

The South half of the South-west quarter and the South half of the South west quarter of Section No. 10, and the North-east quarter of Section No. 15, East half of the South east quarter of Section No. 9, all in township No. 10 South Range No. 34 East, M. D. M., containing 400 acres.

The South-west quarter of Section Thirty-two in Township No. 13 South, Range No. 36 East, M. D. M., containing 160 acres.

An undevided one half interest of in and to that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the said County of Inyo and particularly described as follows, to-Wit: Commencing at the South-east corner of South east quarter of North east quarter of Section No. 18, in Township No 13 south, Range No. 3 East, M. D. M., and running thence west eleven chains and 98 100; thence North-east following the meanderings of the bed of the creek along its North branch to Edwards street, in the town of Independence, thence following said Edwards street along its West line to the place of beginning, six and 80-100 acres, also lot 4 in Block No. 9 in the town of Independence, al constituting what is known as the Reddy Place. Lots Nos. 2 and 4, in Block No. 22, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, as the appears by the official plat of the said town of Independence, now on file in the office of the County Recorder of the said Inyo County.

Two hundred feet undivided, of in and to that certain mining claim, lead or lode, situate, lying and being in the Cerro Gordo Mining District, County of Inyo, State of California, known and designated as the "La Disprioada Lode."

Bids must be in writing and will be received at the residence of the undersigned at George's Creek, Cal, and may be left at said place, or at the office of the District Attorney at Independence, Cal., or delivered to said Executor personally, or may be filed in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court, at any time after the first publication of this notice and before the making of sale.

The Executor reserves the right to eject any and all bids.

Terms and conditions of sale: Cash, lawful money of the United states, ten per cent, of the purchase money to be paid to the said Executor when the sale shal be made, balance on conformation of sale by said Superior Court. Deed at expense of purchaser.

FAMOUS HACKNEYS.

Two Noted Eastern Sires of This Fashionable Breed.

The hackneys are perhaps the horses that have attracted most attention at the New York horse shows in the past three years. The headquarters of the drafts, on the other hand, is Chicago, although the western city is also fully alive to the beauties and graces of the high stepping varieties. Among the animals that have won fame annually in New York none are more familiar to the showgoers than the two hackney stallions represented below.

MATCHLESS OF LONDESBORO.

The first is the renowned old Matchless of Londesboro. Matchless, whose sire was the famous Danegelt, is now 10 years old. He was bred by N. S. Brough, England, imported by Henry Fairfax of Virginia and is now owned by W. Seward Webb.

The house fairly rose to Matchless when he was led into the ring at the New York horse show with a score or more of his colts, frisky young things full of grace and fire. Matchless is kept mostly at Dr. Webb's country place, Shelburne Farm, Vermont. Matchless won the challenge cup of the American Hackney Horse society in 1893 and 1894.

FASHION.

Another one of the short backed, long legged hackneys that won great favor among the admirers of modish horse flesh was Fashion.

His cropped tail stands up like a plume upon a hearse, his neck arches up like a drawn bow, and his legs stretch afar fore and aft. He is now 16 years old, and he belongs to Mr. Prescott Lawrence of Newport, R. I. Fashion is well named.

Fastening Animals In the Stable.

With regard to live stock, the merciful man will make even his stable comfortable. Horses, cattle and sheep must not only be fed and watered, but they must be housed, whether in barns or folds or stables.

Valuable horses are kept in single, roomy stalls and generally are not confined by halters. Others are tied up, sometimes in single or double stalls.

Mates of good disposition can be comfortable in double stalls.

Brood mares should have a single stall.

Sheep may be put by fifties or hundreds in a single fold, but this should be so large that all and each can get at the feed at the same time.

Cattle, especially the milky mothers of the herd, should have a full share of the farmer's care and attention. They cannot be herded together in a fold like sheep. They can, however, be made comfortable in stalls without extra partitions.

In fixed stanchions, which are still in use in most dairies, the cow puts her head through a V shaped stanchion, the right hand upright of which fastens at the top, and the whole assumes the shape of the Roman II when the head is in. I have favored a single pole with a cattle tie adjustable to the size of the neck.

Recently I have seen what may be called an improvement on either of the given methods. The stanchion consists of two upright poles of even size and smoothly rounded, fixed on a round disk made of plank above and below, which allows the whole stanchion to turn or revolve at the will of the cow—that is to say, she can turn her head by her side, the general natural position—while lying down or while standing turn either way to lick herself or rid herself of a fly. With the old stanchions she could not do so, which was and is the principal objection.

Warmth more or less is needed by all animal life, more directly by warm blooded creatures. When it comes to health and thrift or growth, it is produced by food which is as fuel to a furnace or stove and husbanded by warm stables.

Cattle, horses and sheep will consume, and need it also, from one-third to one-half more of feed during winter under open sheds or with no shelter overhead than live stock well housed in barns or stables. Hence it is true economy to provide these. Nothing looks more pitiful than to see cattle and sheep shivering on the lee side of a rail fence in a snowstorm. A man who will subject his animals to such treatment is not a farmer, for he does not even study his own best interests.—C. W. M. in St. Louis Republic.

When horses shy at cars, umbrellas or baby wagons or are generally skittish, it is a sign not that the animals are really scared, but that they are not more than half broken.

Changing Size of Hive Entrance.

The editor of The American Bee Journal says: As a matter of actual practice, I think most bedkeepers leave the entrance the same the year round, although those who winter in cellars and who do not give upward ventilation prefer to have the entrance much enlarged while in the cellar, even to taking away the bottom board entirely. If there is any time when it seems profitable to lessen the entrance, I should say it is when first flights begin in spring, so as to save the heat as much as possible for breeding purposes.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

LIME AS A FERTILIZER.

The Natural History of Lime as It Is Used In Good Farming.

Many persons in whose good judgment and sense every one has confidence insist that lime is not a plant food, and is therefore useless as a fertilizer. Now, a plant food is considered to be anything that, being contained in plants to a large extent, may be applied to the soil to contribute to the supply of it for the crops. When we see that when such an element of plant substance is applied to the soil the following crop is greatly helped, we can hardly agree with the opinion that it is not a food for plants, writes Henry Stewart to American Agriculturist. He says:

If we study the composition of plants, we find that lime is the most important part of the mineral elements of nearly every one. The ash of a plant is made up of these mineral elements, and by examining the ash we may discover what kinds and quantities of mineral matters the plants require. And it is to be remembered that in the growth of plants every element found in them is indispensable. But how much more must it be so, if such a thing were possible, for one element to be more indispensable than another, for lime, which exists in such a large proportion, to be anything but indispensable?

And this must be thought so as we consider that in the ash of hay one-eighth part is lime. In the ash of clover more than a third of it is lime. In the ash of potato tops nearly one-half is lime. The ashes of wood, which we think so valuable on account of the potash in them, have several times more lime than potash, the lime amounting to from 30 to 70 per cent. And there is not one plant grown that has not lime in its ashes. The same applies to potash and phosphoric acid, and reasonably these are supposed to be food for plants. Why, then, is not lime a plant food? Surely it must be so considered.

The best farmed localities in the world are those where the soil contains a large proportion of lime, being derived from the decomposition of limestone rocks. But it is not so much on account of the lime in the soil that the land is so well farmed and so productive, but mostly for the reason that, lime being there abundant and cheap, the farmers burn the limestone and make lime and apply it to the land. Lime only is a plant food, but limestone is not, and the soil may be well filled with limestone and yet be quite poor. This is common experience. Now, lime is a very active chemical substance. This will be seen if some of it is put in some vinegar. This will foam up and boil over the cup, and a larger quantity of gas will be evolved. In the end there will be no more acid in the vinegar. And this is one effect of lime on soil that is sour, such as swamp land, in which the excess of acid prevents the growth of any useful plants.

If we put some lime on a dead animal or any other organic matter, it will quickly decompose it and reduce it to its original elements, and this is one effect of lime when used in a compost, the matters thus decomposed then becoming good manure and useful food for plants. And this same effect is produced in the soil when quicklime is applied as it usually is in the fall, when the land is prepared for wheat and grass followed by seeding. But the chemist can take some sand or other mineral matter and mix lime with it and then add water, and the lime will dissolve quite a considerable quantity of this mineral matter, forming silicate of lime, and by taking the silica from the potash or the phosphates or magnesia or the alumina, etc., that the soil is made up of, the lime renders these elements of plant food soluble and available for the crops.

Now, this is a small part of the natural history of lime as it is used in good farming. And with such a history we must realize its value to the farmer quite independently of the fact whether it is actually a plant food or not. And as this is the season when the land is in the best condition for the application of lime, as lime is most soluble in cold water and the wheat crop is most convenient for it, it is a question for all of us if it is not advisable to so use it and gather the fruits of its goods effects on the soil. The freshly burned lime only is used, and 20 to 40 bushels per acre is the usual quantity. It is left in heaps in the field, preferably of one bushel each two rods apart, and in a few days it falls to a fine powder by the action of the moisture of the air or a shower of rain, when it is easily spread quite evenly, so as just to whiten the surface, with a long handled shovel. But when the lime is thus used for the wheat it is not advisable to use superphosphate until the spring. It can then be used to advantage.

A Pertinent Question.

A Long Island correspondent thinks he has solved the wheat problem. He cut it when in blossom before the kernels formed. It was a success. Cows and horses preferred it to clover hay. Rural New Yorker, commenting on the foregoing, asks:

Did it ever occur to you that the total feeding value in the dry straw and hard grain from an acre of wheat might be less than that in the same crop when cut early and cured as hay? There certainly cannot be any less, and we believe the cow will find more actually digestible nutriment in the tender hay than in the grain and woody straw. In this case the cost of thrashing is saved, while haymaking is cheaper than harvesting.

Do Not Sleep on the Left Side.

There is little doubt that an immense number of persons habitually sleep on the left side, and those who do so can never, it is said, be strictly healthy. It is the most prolific cause of nightmare, and also of the unpleasant taste in the mouth on arising in the morning. All food enters and leaves the stomach on the right side, and hence sleeping on the left side soon after eating involves a sort of pumping operation which is anything but conducive to sound repose. The action of the heart is also seriously interfered with and the lungs unduly compressed. Hence it is best to cultivate the habit of always sleeping on the right side, although Sandow and other strong men are said to invariably sleep on their backs.—Philadelphia Times.

Mustache Versus Music.

Anton Rubinstein is quoted thus in reference to women artists:

"I think ladies ought never to study music as an art. At least, they ought not to take up the time of teachers who are able to teach and make true artists. And I will tell you why. There is no question but there are 20 musical ladies to one musical man, and my own experience is that they learn more quickly, have more poetry, and, in fact, are more diligent pupils than men. But what is the invariable result? When a young lady has become a perfect artist, some handsome mustache comes along, and she chooses the handsome mustache in preference to art."

I felt the breath of the expiring year
Pass in the moaning breeze, and to my sight
Glistened each star, as twere a frozen tear
Upon the mute and lonesome face of night.
Time, in our breasts, that slumbers not nor sleeps,
Marks the faint murmur of eternity
As ever round with rhythmic impulse sweeps
Sweet little eddy of the life to be.

We look, and, lo! afar doth stretch the deep
With ebb and flow amid the storm and calm,
Raising its thunderous praises to heaven's steep
Or chanting to the shore a lowly psalm,
While in the ears that hear, from little hearts
That shrink and swell as with imprisoned love,
Steal o'er the silence of their inmost parts
The nearer echoes of a voice above.
—Thomas Harkness in Chambers' Journal.

DIED.

BELL—At Camp Independence, Cal., March, 27, 1896, A. N. Bell, a native North Carolina, aged 78 years, 5 months.

Don't look for another eclipse before August 9th.

The Supervisors meet a week from next Monday.

H. C Hamilton of Lone Pine, spent the day in town last Wednesday.

John F. Meroney went to Bishop last Tuesday, where he will remain.

Pat Keys came in from Beveridge last Wednesday for more supplies.

The school terms are all drawing to a close. Some have already closed.

Fred Hulbert will soon start for Los Angeles with a band of beef cattle.

J. D. Lewis Esq. came down from Bishop yesterday and returned to-day.

Mrs. H. J. Bell of Big Pine was a visitor in town yesterday, returning to-day.

Master Ivan and Miss Blanche Bunney are attending the Academy at Bishop.

Mrs. H. Levy returned from a visit of several weeks in San Francisco last Monday.

A. Stecker will start for Snow's Canyon to-day, to commence work on the new mill.

Attorney J. W. Smith came down from Bishop last Tuesday and spent several days here.

The regular meeting of Inyo Lodge No. 221 F. & A. M., will be held to-morrow evening.

Miss Aggie Harvey of Lone Pine visited with Miss Jessie Paterson several days the first of the week.

The Odd Fellows lodge of this place is thinking of holding a celebration here on the 26th of next month.

An interesting report of how labor is obtained at the Transvaal mines will be found on the second page.

Mrs. A. Church and children came down from Hawthorne last Friday and are visiting with relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Meroney arrived from Bishop last Wednesday evening and remained over a couple of days here.

Another attempt to hold up a train was made near Visalia last week. One robber was killed and two officers wounded.

Dick Kennedy came up from Keeler yesterday morning. He is on the sick list and will remain and wait improvements.

Of those on the sick list the past week John Baxter and Albert Lewis are reported better, while A. N. Bell has not improved.

J. J. Morton came up from Keeler and spent the festivities of the 17th here with relatives and friends, returning home last Wednesday.

We are doing business on business principles. No Cheatam St. methods with us, and we defy competition.—Nathan Rhine. *

John Shepherd has bought out the interest of Dave Holland in the hotel at at Keeler, and will hereafter manage that business.

Twenty-five thousand rabbits were killed in a drive held near Fresno last Saturday. Eight thousand people participated in the drive.

W. H. Morton came over from the Hirsh mine last Wednesday morning and went out to his home at Blackrock for several week's rest.

The Committee of the Congressional Church has drawn up their findings in the Brown case, charging Dr. Brown with unministerial conduct.

The Latest Novelties In Spring Items.

There was no celebration in Keeler on St. Patrick's day. Everybody was appearently too busy to celebrate. Postponed until fourth of July or till next March.

Mike Carey has quit the Soda Works and gone to Darwin for work.

M. C. Anton and family, formerly of Lone Pine, have rented a house in Keeler and will locate here for the present.

Oscar Dearborne and family have also rented a house from Boland and will be a steady resident of Keeler from now on.

Miss Ida Adams came over from Lone Pine last week and visited friends.

P. A. Chalfant, county assessor and J. E. Parker, deputy, done up this end of last week and Mr. Parker went to Panamint and has not yet returned.

Mrs. J. J. Morton is visiting friends in Independence.

John Barnes went to Big Pine last week on some law busines connected with some stray stock and he returned last Friday. The matter was amicably adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned it is said.

Dave Holland went to Darwin on a business trip last week and found everything booming out in that section.

H. L. Wrinkle received a new 1896 Remington bicycle last week and it is a daisy. He has been appointed agent for this section of the country.

Miller's stage was loaded last trip in. It carried five or six Chinese who came in from Fresno and Bakersfield.

John Shepherd of Georges Creek has subleased the Lakeview hotel property from Dave Holland and took charge on March 20th. His wife came down with him.

Miss Dona Cruz and Mrs. Relles S. Carrasco visited friends in Keeler last Thursday and returned to Lone Pine the next day.

W. Arcularius has finished hauling three carloads of number one ore for Lane, and went up the valley Thursday. He has a bran new $275 hay press from Los Angeles and will bale forty or fifty tons of hay before he returns.

At the present time there are between fifteen and twenty children in and around Keeler and vicinity between the ages of five and seventeen years of age. It is certainly high time that some provision should be made for a school, as Keeler is a rising community and the children should not be allowed to grow up like pinites with no advantage of school when they are rightly entitled to it. Let some one make the right start or move and keep the ball rolling. It is asked by every stranger coming through this section, where is your school house?

An objusticated individual who had evidently been trying to drink up all the whiskey in Keeler, corkscrewed about the town for some time the other day and at last ran up against a hitching post in front of the Maison de Lac, where after firmly buoying himself, he managed to extricate an arm which he waved wildly in the air while addressing a group of villagers who seemed to have cropped out of the earth on that instant, as no one had been seen in that vicinity for an hour previously. "Boys," he said, "If I was only (hic) rich I'd pulverize the whole country (hic) an then I'd (hic) pay fer the damages. I'm drunk an (hic) glad of it. Jest come here (hic) to take the Keeler-cure (hic) Thish yer frog pond," waving his arm toward the lake, 'is (hic) sponsible for my exishense. Would n't stay here for five dollars (hic) a day, cos I've got big interesh in nuther (hic) place, but I've got to take the (hic) Keeler-cure. What's masher wiz Keeler? She's (hic) all right Shay boys, some son of a gun shtole my four-dollar hat last night. Zat feller'll die (hic) of enlargement (hic) of ze heart. (hic) shtole my hat (hic) an me broke too—no zat can't be. How can a man (hic) be drunk an (hic) broke too? When a (hic) man's drunk he's worth a (hic) million dollars, an don't forgit it.

Yours & etc.
NOVELTY.

Notice

A meeting of the People's Party County Central Committee is hereby called to meet at Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal., on Saturday, April 18 1896. For the purpose of electing (2) delegates to the State Convention, and to fix a time and place for holding a County Nominating Convention, and to transact such other business as may properly come before the Committee.

J. R. ELDRED, Chairman.
THOS. CALLOW, Secretary.

Dated at Big Pine, March 24, 1896.

The Hirsh Mine.

The directors and experts who have been visiting the Hirsh mine for the past two weeks departed last Saturday. Considerable assaying was done, and several samples were sent away to be tried by the new cyanide process. It is understood they advised the putting in of ten more stamps as soon as the mine was developed enough to keep them running. The mill now handles the ore faster than it can be taken out of the mine and more men are put in the mine as fast as development goes on.

Estray Notice

There came to my place at the "Tennessee Ranch," about 16 miles from Darwin, two horses described as follows: One brown, branded JE and vented JE on right hip and shoulder. One roan, branded C3 right hip. Taken up Sept. 10, 1895. The owner is hereby notified to claim his property and pay the charges upon the same, or I will, at the expiration of thirty days cause them to be sold according to law.

JAMES WOOD.

Tennessee Ranch, March 16, 1896.

P. H. Mack Esq. left last Saturday morning for an extended trip through several of the southwestern states and Mexico. On his return trip he will be accompanied by Miss Nettie Irwin, who is coming home after a visit of two years with relatives in El Paso, Texas.

H. E. Wilkinson, who was official observer of the Weather Bureau the most of the time it was situated here, left yesterday morning for Sacramento, from where he will go to take charge of the office wherever it shall be situated.

Hundreds of head of cattle are grazing in the sage brush along the foothills on the west side of the valley. The past warm weather has given the grass and brush a good start, and the feed is very fair.

Miss Jennie Baxter came down from Bishop last Friday on a visit to her parents. She will return to Bishop soon to resume her studies at the opening of the spring term of the Academy.

The jury in the Jones case, at Carson, could not agree and were discharged. They stood, seven for conviction and five for acquittal. A new trial will be held immediately.

Our new stock of men's clothing has just been received and we invite you to call and inspect it. We will make you prices that will stun you. Rhine's the Leaders. *

Miss M. M. Gregory, who taught the Liberty public school the past term, left last Monday evening for a visit to Southern California, going by the Keeler and Mojave stage.

Our prices on clothing and furnishing goods are lower than our competitors can buy them for. It costs you nothing to look at them—Rhine's, always in the lead. *

The New Stevens Ditch Company advertises delinquent sale this week.

Mrs. W. L. Hunter of Georges Creek is visiting with friends in town.

Bodie is to have an electric light plant.

Next Wednesday is April Fools day.

Entertainment.

There will be an entertainment at the M. E. Church, Thursday, April 2d. Admission 25cts. Refreshments will be served. All are cordially invited, and a good attendance is hoped for, as the proceeds are to insure the church.

Especial Tenaks

We desire to extend our sincere thanks to the friends of Independence who manifested their kind sympathy in our sad bereavement and to those who thoughtfully volunteered floral offerings to the memory of Theresa Walker. Their acts will be lastingly remembered by

MRS. WILLIAM WALKER AND FAMILY.

Evening Party.

A very pleasant evening party was enjoyed by the young folks at the residence of Mr. Baxter, last Tuesday evening. Dancing was commenced at an early hour, and the large number of young folks, under the direction of Miss Jennie Baxter, spent the time happily until the midnight hour, when an excellent supper was partaken of, and dancing was again resumed to satisfy the many young hearts present.

Religious Services.

The order of services on the Independence charge until further notice will be as follows: Independence—Service every Sunday evening to commence at 7 o'clock Services every fourth Sunday in the morning to commence at 11 o'clock. ABSOLUTELY PURE

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE.

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR," "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE," ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

Presently he ate his heart out with mortification. To be yoked forever to—a savage! It was horrible! Their children? It was strange he had not thought of that before. Children? He shrugged his shoulders. There might possibly be a child, but children — never! But he doubted even regarding a child, for no word had come to him concerning that possibility. He was even most puzzled at the tone and substance of their letters. From the beginning there had been no reproaches, no excitement, no railing, but studied kindness and conventional statements, through which Mrs. Armour's solicitous affection scarcely ever peeped. He had shot his bolt and got—consideration, almost imperturbability. They appeared to treat the matter as though he were a wild youth who would yet mend his ways. He read over their infrequent letters to him; his to them had been still more infrequent. In one there was the statement that "she was progressing favorably with her English," in another that "she was riding a good deal," again that "she appeared anxious to adapt herself to her new life."

At all these he whistled a little to himself and smiled bitterly. Then, all at once, he got up and straightway burned them all. He again tried to put the matter behind him for the present, knowing that he must face it one day, and staving off its reality as long as possible. He did his utmost to be philosophical and say his quid refert, but it was easier tried than done, for Jacques Pontiac's words kept rankling in his mind, and he found himself carrying round a vague load which made him abstracted occasionally and often a little reckless in action and speech. In hunting bear and moose he had proved himself more daring than the oldest hunter and proportionately successful. He paid his servants well, but was sharp with them. He made long, hard expeditions, defying the weather as the hardiest of prairie and mountain men mostly hesitate to defy it. He bought up much land, then, dissatisfied, sold it again at a loss, but subsequently made final arrangements for establishing a very large farm.

When he once became actually interested in this, he shook off something of his moodiness and settled himself to develop the thing. He had good talent for initiative and administration and at last, in the time when his wife was a feature of the London season, he found his scheme in working order, and the necessity of going to England was forced upon him.

Actually he wished that the absolute necessity had presented itself before. There was always the moral necessity, of course—but then! Here now was a business need, and he must go. Yet he did not fix a day or make definite arrangements. He could hardly have believed himself such a coward. With liberal emphasis he called himself a sneak, and one day at Fort Charles sat down to write to his solicitor in Montreal to say that he would come on at once. Still he hesitated. As he sat there thinking Eye-of-the-Moon, his father-in-law, opened the door quietly and entered. He had avoided the chief ever since he had come back to Fort Charles and practically had not spoken to him for a year. Armour flushed slightly with annoyance. But presently, with a touch of his old humor, he rose, held out his hand and said ironically: "Well, father-in-law, it's about time we had a big talk, isn't it? We are not very intimate for such close relatives."

The old Indian did not fully understand the meaning or the tone of Armour's speech, but he said, "How!" and reaching out his hand for the pipe offered him lighted it and sat down, smoking in silence. Armour waited; but, seeing that the other was not yet moved to talk, he turned to his letter again. After a time Eye-of-the-Moon said gravely, getting to his feet, "Brother!"

Armour looked up; then rose also. The Indian bowed to him courteously; then sat down again. Armour threw a leg over the corner of the table and waited.

"Brother," said the Indian presently, "you are of the great race that conquers us. You come and take our land and our game, and we have to beg of you for food and shelter. Then you take our daughters, and we know not where they go. They are gone, like the down from the thistle. We see them not, but you remain. And men say evil things. There are bad words abroad. Brother, what have you done with my daughter?"

Had the Indian come and stormed, begged money of him, sponged on him or abused him he had taken it very calmly. He, in fact, had been superior. But there was dignity in the chief's manner; there was solemnity in his speech; his voice conveyed resoluteness and earnestness, which the stoic calm of his face might not have suggested, and Armour felt that he had no advantage at all. Beside, Armour had a conscience, though he had played some rare tricks with it of late, and it needed more hardihood than he possessed to face this old man down. And why face him down? Lali was his daughter, blood of his blood, the chieftainess of one branch of his people, honored at least among these poor savages, and the old man had a right to ask, as asked another more famous, "Where is my daughter?"

His hands in his pockets, Armour sat silent for a minute, eying his boot as he swung his leg to and fro. Presently he said: "Eye-of-the-Moon, I don't think I can talk as poetically as you, even in my own language, and I shall not try, but I should like to ask you this, Do you believe any harm has come to your daughter—to my wife?"

The old Indian forgot to blow the tobacco smoke from his mouth, and as he sat debating, lips slightly apart, it came leaking out in little trailing clouds and gave a strange appearance to his iron featured face. He looked steadily at Armour and said: "You are of those who rule in your land"—here Armour protested—"you have much gold to buy and sell. I am a chief"—he drew himself up—"I am poor. We speak with the straight tongue. It is cowards who lie. Speak deep, as from the heart, my brother, and tell me where my daughter is."

Armour could not but respect the chief for the way this request was put, but still it galled him to think that he was under suspicion of having done any bodily injury to his wife, so he quietly persisted, "Do you think I have done Lali any harm?"

"The thing is strange," replied the other. "You are of those who are great among your people. You married a daughter of a red man. Then she was yours for less than one moon, and you sent her far away, and you staid. Her father was as a dog in your sight. Do men whose hearts are clear act so? They have said strange things of you. I have not believed, but it is good I know all, that I may say to the tale bearers, 'You have crooked tongues.'"

Armour sat for a moment longer, his face turned to the open window. He was perfectly still, but he had become grave. He was about to reply to the chief when the trader entered the room hurriedly with a newspaper in his hand. He paused abruptly when he saw Eye-of-the-Moon. Armour felt that the trader had something important to communicate. He guessed it was in the paper. He mutely held out his hand for it. The trader handed it to him hesitatingly, at the same time pointing to a paragraph and saying: "It is nearly two years old, as you see. I chanced upon it by accident today."

"Brother, what have you done with my daughter?"

It was a copy of a London evening paper containing a somewhat sensational account of Lali's accident. It said that she was in a critical condition. This time Armour did not ask for brandy, but the trader put it out beside him. He shook his head. "Gordon," he said presently, "I shall leave here in the morning. Please send my men to me."

The trader whispered to him: "She was all right, of course, long ago, Mr. Armour, or you would have heard."

Armour looked at the date of the paper. He had several letters from England of a later date, and these said nothing of her illness. It bewildered him; made him uneasy. Perhaps the first real sense of his duty as a husband came home to him there. For the first time he was anxious about the woman for her own sake. The trader had left the room.

"What a scoundrel I've been!" said Armour between his teeth, oblivious for the moment of Eye-of-the Moon's presence. Presently, bethinking himself, he turned to the Indian. "I've been debating," he said. "Eye-of-the-Moon, my wife is in England, at my father's home. I am going to her. Men have lied in thinking I would do her any injury, but, but—never mind, the harm was of another kind. It isn't wise for a white man and an Indian to marry, but when they are married—well, they must live as man and wife should live, and, as I said, I am going to my wife—your daughter."

To say all this to a common Indian whose only property was a half dozen ponies and a couple of tepees required something very like moral courage, but, then, Armour had not been exercising moral courage during the last year or so, and its exercise was profitable to him. The next morning he was on his way to Montreal, and Eye-of-the-Moon was the richest chief in British North America at that moment by $5,000 or so.

CHAPTER VIII.

It was the close of the season. Many people had left town, but festivities were still on. To a stranger the season might have seemed at its height. The Armours were giving a large party in Cavendish square before going back again to Greyhope, where, for the sake of Lali and her child, they intended to remain during the rest of the summer in preference to going on the continent or to Scotland. The only unsatisfactory feature of Lali's season was the absence of her husband. Naturally there were those who said strange things regarding Frank Armour's stay in America, but it was pretty generally known that he was engaged in land speculations, and his club friends, who perhaps took the pleasantest view of the matter, said that he was very wise indeed, if a little cowardly, in staying abroad until his wife was educated and ready to take her position in society. There was one thing on which they all agreed—Mrs. Frank Armour either had a mind superior to the charms of their sex or was incapable of that vanity which hath many suitors and says, "So far shalt thou go, and"——

The fact is, Mrs. Frank Armour's mind was superior. She had only one object—to triumph over her husband grandly, as a woman righteously might. She had vanity, of course, but it was not ignoble. She kept one thing in view; she lived for it. Her translation had been successful. There were times when she remembered her father, the wild days on the prairies, the buffalo hunt, tracking the deer, tribal battles, the long silent hours of the winter and the warm summer nights when she slept in the prairie grass or camped with her people in the trough of a great land wave. Sometimes the hunger for its freedom, and its idleness, and its sport came to her greatly, but she thought of her child, and she put it from her. She was ambitious for him; she was keen to prove her worth as a wife against her husband's unworthiness. This perhaps saved her. She might have lost had her life been without this motive.

The very morning of this notable reception General Armour had received a note from Frank Armour's solicitor saying that his son was likely to arrive in London from America that day or the next. Frank had written to his people no word of his coming. To his wife, as we have said, he had not written for months, and before he started back he would not write, because he wished to make what amends he could in person. He expected to find her improved, of course, but still he could only think of her as an Indian, showing her common prairie origin. His knowledge of her before their marriage had been particularly brief. She was little more in his eyes than a thousand other Indian women, save that she was better looking, was whiter than most and had finer features. He could not very clearly remember the tones of her voice, because after marriage and before he had sent her to England he had seen little or nothing of her.

When General Armour received the news of Frank's return, he told his wife and Marion, and they consulted together whether it were good to let Lali know at once. He might arrive that evening. If so, the position would be awkward, because it was impossible to tell how it might affect her. If they did tell her, and Frank happened not to arrive, it might unnerve her so as to make her appearance in the evening doubtful. Richard, the wiseacre, the inexhaustible Richard, was caring for his cottagers and cutting the leaves of new books—his chief pleasure—at Greyhope. They felt it was a matter they ought to be able to decide for themselves, but still it was the last evening of Lali's stay in town, and they did not care to take any risk. Strange to say, they had come to take pride in their son's wife, for even General and Mrs. Armour, high minded and of serene social status as they were, seemed not quite insensible to the pleasure of being an axle on which a system of social notoriety revolved.

At the opportune moment Captain Vidall was announced, and because he and Marion were soon to carry but one name between them he was called into family consultation. It is somewhat singular that in this case the women were quite wrong and the men were quite right, for General Armour and Captain Vidall were for silence until Frank came, if he came that day, or for telling her the following morning, when the function was over. And the men prevailed.

Marion was much excited all day. She had given orders that Frank's room should be made ready, but for whom she gave no information. While Lali was dressing for the evening, somewhat excited and nervous, she entered her room. They were now the best of friends. The years had seen many shifting scenes in their companionship. They had been as often at war as at peace, but they had respected each other, each after her own fashion, and now they had a real and mutual regard.

Lali's was a slim, lithe figure, wearing its fashionable robes with an air of possession, and the face above it, if not entirely beautiful, had a strange, warm fascination. The girl had not been a chieftainess for nothing. A look of quiet command was there, but also a faraway expression which gave a faint look of sadness even when a smile was at the lips. The smile itself did not come quickly—it grew—but above it all was hair of perfect brown, most rare, setting off her face as a plume does a helmet. She showed no surprise when Marion entered. She welcomed her with a smile and outstretched hand, but said nothing.

Syrup of Figs

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A Story With a Moral.

Speaking of the people who come in late into the movements of reform and take on the air of the early martyrs reminds a critic of the woman's movement of the story of a fisherman down in Gloucester. He had a little fishing smack and was in the habit of going out in the harbor to catch a few fish. Coming in one morning when there was a dense fog, all at once the fog lifted, and he found he was sailing directly into an East Indiaman, a large vessel, lying at anchor. However, he got astern of her and cried out:

"Ship, ahoy!"

"Aye, aye, sir," said the captain of the great East Indiaman.

"What ship is that?"

"The Albatross."

"Where from?"

"From Calcutta, bound for Boston."

"How long have you been out?"

"One hundred and ten days. Who are you?"

"The Lucy, from Gloucester."

"How long have you been out?"

"All night."

Well, now, when these all night people undertake to discuss this question you would think they had been out 110 days.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Color Line Obliterated.

The Chicago Women's club, which distinguished itself last winter by having internal dissension on the admission of Mrs. Fannie Berrier Williams, a colored applicant for membership, has at last placed itself on record as being in sympathy with the spirit of the fifteenth amendment.

The progressive members of the club have amended the constitution, and the club as a whole has accepted the amendments. The clause which it was feared might cause a controversy was passed without comment. It declares qualifications for membership to be character, intelligence and the reciprocal advantages to the club and the individual, without regard to race, color, religion or politics, and it was carried, consequently by the concluding ballot. By virtue of this final decision on the color line the supporters of Mrs. Fannie Berrier Williams say there is no reason why her name may not be proposed for readmission this autumn.—Exchange.

Miss Mary W. Wells.

Miss Mary W. Wells, a graduate of Wyoming (N. Y.) seminary, has been superintendent of the deaconess home in Baltimore for nearly two years past. Recently she was transferred to the superintendency of the Jane Abraham deaconess home of Portland, Or. Miss Wells was a teacher for some time in Iowa Wesleyan university, afterward preceptress in Napa Collegiate institute, California. Returning to Iowa she took a course of study in medicine and was admitted to the Iowa Pharmaceutical association. The care of her aged mother in Knoxville, Ia., confined her to home work, where she was selected as Sunday school superintendent, and served with great acceptability. When relieved from home cares, she entered the Lucy Webb Hayes Training school in Washington, where she graduated with honor.

Will Try to Improve the Law.

The Twentieth Century club of Washington city has been discussing the "Legal Status of Women In the District of Columbia." As the common law prevails there with regard to women, it was not difficult to point to many instances of great hardship. Mrs. Enoch Totten, president, said that a widow could not control property acquired through gifts of her husband. The club voted to co-operate with the Federation of Women's Clubs and other organizations interested in the matter in a petition to congress to codify the laws of the District of Columbia. The board of trade of Washington has the matter in charge and has engaged legal talent to prepare a proper bill for congress. Women organizations have been requested by the board of trade to formulate their bill, so that it may be incorporated and presented in the general petition.—Washington Letter.

For Robust Appetites.

M. Jean Couet, director of the culinary department of the Gil Blas of Paris, adapts his recipes to all classes. Among those given recently is one particularly available in families whose members possess robust appetites: Put in a stock pot 3¾ quarts of water. When it boils, place in it 2¼ pounds of beef and about a pound of smoked beef tongue. Add 2 cabbages of medium size, previously blanched. Cook for three hours. Withdraw the cabbages, drain them, season with butter, pepper and salt, cut in slices the meat and tongue and place on the cabbage and serve. To blanch vegetables scald them in strongly salted water. The liquid in which the cabbages and meat are boiled is immediately available for soup, with the addition of a little butter and fried bread or croutons.

Women and Economics.

A cultivated Gotham woman urges in a published letter that newspapers do more to commend economics to women in order that it may form part of the tuition of a home whose intelligence leavens all the after life and affects the interests of its children. She asks, "Why not have a column devoted to economics for women, or rather to attract women, or, if that be not feasible, why not intersperse the 'fashion' column with economic doctrines?"

WIND SWEPT.

Were it not for the intervening mountain ranges, this country, from Northwest to Southeast, would at times in winter be swept by devastating tornadoes. Blizzards seem to arise out of the caves and canons of the plains. Gaining strength and volume over a wide expanse, their force is arrested by the battlements of big hills. Sometimes they rise above the barriers and sweep the Middle states with fury. There you enjoy one day a mean temperature, and the next may be far below freezing. It is like an ice water bath on a warm day, and the shock to muscles, nerves and circulation is the cause of sudden neuralgic and rheumatic attacks, both violent and acute. Those predisposed to such should have the master cure, St. Jacobs Oil, always ready. Its prompt use prevents the chronic stage, and in the chronic stage it is a prompt, sure cure.

He—Do you think my picture looks like me? She (sympathetically)—Yes, I am sorry to say it does.

GOT A BABY BOY NOW.

Happiness in a Southern Man's Home.

Heed the Red Flag of Danger at the Railroad Crossing. A Warning to America's Men.

"For twenty-six years I have used tobacco in great quantities, and of late years took to cigarette smoking" writes Mr. W. E. Simpson, of Le Compte, La. "I want to go on record that tobacco has robbed me of many years of life and a great deal of happiness. I realize it now as I compare my feelings and my condition with that of a year ago, when I was a tobacco saturated cigarette fiend.

"Many and many a time did I try to quit smoking myself into eternity, but I could not put through a day without suffering extreme nervous torture, which would increase hour by hour till finally, to save myself as it seemed from almost flying to pieces, I had to light the little white pipe-stick and swallow the smoke.

"One day I read in my paper 'Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away,' just what I was doing; it came to me like the warning of the man who waves the red flag of danger at the railroad crossing, and said that No-To-Bac was an absolutely guaranteed relief from tobacco slavery.

"I did not believe it, but like a drowning man grasping at a straw, I commenced taking No-To-Bac.

The effects were magical; it destroyed the nerve craving and desire for cigarettes. Two boxes, would you believe it? made me well and strong.

"I have gained mentally, physically in vigor and manhood, and with the brain free from the nicotine and a breath no longer befouled with tobacco smoke, I am so happy today to write No-To-Bac did it all a year ago, so the cure is time-tested and tried, not only in my own case, but several of my friends who have also been cured.

"We have a baby boy now.

"My wife and I feel that all this happiness started from the time when I first used No-To-Bac, and in evidence of our appreciation, and in order that the memory of the happiness may be perpetuated in a living form, we want to name our baby boy after the man who wrote the line 'Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away.'

"No-To-Bac is popular here and all our druggists sell it. Hardly a day passes but somebody asks me about No-To-Bac, so I don't want you to hesitate to use these lines in any way that you think will make known to suffering humanity the happiness that there is in No-To-Bac for the many men with nicotinized brains and weakened resolutions, if they will only make up their mind to save the waste of vital power—to say nothing of the money—now going up into smoke and out in tobacco spit."

He—Why do they call women the fair sex? She—To distinguish them from the unfair sex, no doubt.

I use Piso's Cure for Consumption both in my family and practice.—Dr. G. W. Patterson, Inkster, Mich, Nov. 5, 1894.

VERY AWKWARD INDEED.

This is precisely the kind of mistake a man makes if he "turns out" on the wrong side of the road when a vehicle comes toward him. No less absurd is the error of the individual who takes drastic medicines to relieve his liver. That organ is on the right side, and the road to its relief is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine also adapted to the relief of dyspepsia, constipation, kidney and rheumatic ailments and malaria.

The Thin One—Dear me! You are losing all your outlines. The Fat One—And you are getting to be nothing else.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly denned, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

Reggy (quoting Hamlet)—"If thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool." Maude—Oh, Tom, this is so sudden.

AS WE USED TO LONG AGO.

Play that you are mother, dear,
And play that papa is your beau;
Play that we sit in the corner here,
Just as we used to long ago;
Play so, we lovers two,
Are just as happy as can be,
And I'll say, "'I love you!'" to you,
And you say, "I love you!'" to me!
"I love you!" we both shall say,
All in earnest and all in play.

Or, play that you are the other one
That sometimes came and went away,
And play that the light of years agone
Stole into my heart again today!
Playing that you are the one I knew
In the days that never again may be,
I'll say, "I love you!" to you,
And you say, "I love you!" to me!
"I love you!" my heart will say
To the ghost of the past come back today.

Or, play that you sought this nestling place
For your own sweet self, with that dual guise
Of your pretty mother in your face
And the look of that other in your eyes!
So the dear old love shall live anew,
As I hold my darling on my knee,
And I'll say, "I love you!" to you,
And you'll say, "I love you!" to me!
Oh, many a strange, true thing we say
And do when we pretend to play!

—Eugene Field in Chicago Record.

THE LIAR.

I never loved but one woman. I passed five years with her in perfect happiness. I can truly say that to her I owe my success, because of my freedom from care and because she imbued me with some of her great ambition. From the first moment we met it seemed to me that I had always loved her. Her beauty and character answered all my dreams. That woman never left me. She died in my house, in my arms and still loving me. But when I think of her it drives me mad. If I attempt to describe her as she was during the five years, in all the glory of her love, with her tall, svelte figure, her clear cut features, like an oriental Jew's, her luminous, pale face, her cheerful talk, her voice soft and sweet as her glance; if I try to bring again to my mind that vision of delight, it is only to say—I hate her!

Her name was Clotilde. In the house in which I first met her she was known as Mme. Deloche, the widow of a captain long since dead. She appeared to have traveled extensively. In her conversation she would sometimes say, "When I was at Tampico," or, perhaps, "Once during a raid in Valparaiso." Aside from these remarks nothing in her manner, in her language, suggested a nomadic life—nothing of that disorder and hurry incident to quick departures or untimely arrivals. She was a Parisian, dressed always with exquisite taste, without a burnoose or those eccentric scrapes by which one recognizes the wives of officers and marines who are perpetually on the move.

When I found that I loved her, my only idea was to ask her hand in marriage. A friend spoke to her for me. She replied simply that she should never marry. Thenceforth I avoided places where I would see her, and as I was too unhappy to work I resolved to go away. I was making preparations for departure, when, one morning, in the midst of the confusion of packing, Mme. Deloche entered my apartment.

"Why do you go away?" she asked. "Because you love me? I also love you, only"—here her voice trembled a little—"only I am married." And she told me her history.

It was a story of love and desertion. Her husband was dissipated. He had beaten her. They separated at the end of three years. Her family, of whom she seemed very proud, occupied high positions in Paris, but since her marriage they had disowned her. She was a niece of the grand rabbi. Her sister, widow of an officer of high rank, had married for a second husband the general of the guard at St. Germain. As for herself, financially ruined by her husband, she had fortunately been highly educated and possessed several accomplishments, of which she now made use. She gave lessons in music in the wealthy families of the Chausee d'Antin and the Faubourg St. Germain.

Her story was touching, but quite long, full of the pretty repetitions and interminable incidents which crowd the talk of women. I hired a pretty little house in the Avenue de l'Imperatrice. I passed the first year listening to her, looking at her, without thinking of work. It was she who first urged me to enter my studio and fired me with ambition to become a great artist. I could not induce her to give up her pupils. This independence touched me deeply. I admired the proud soul which made me feel a little humiliated before the expressed wish to owe nothing except to her own exertions. We were thus separated every day.

With what happiness I returned home, so impatient when she was late, so happy when I found her there before me! From her pupils in Paris she brought me rare flowers. I often forced her to accept some present, but she laughingly said that she was richer than I, and the lessons must have been very profitable, for she always dressed with great elegance and always in black, which she wore through coquetry on account of her complexion.

Her beauty was enhanced by heavy velvets, shining jets, lustrous satins and masses of silky laces. All her pupils, daughters of bankers and financiers, adored and respected her, and more than once she showed me a bracelet, a bangle or a piece of lace which one of them had given her.

Except when at work, we were never separated. Only on Sunday she went to St. Germain to see her sister, the wife of the general, with whom, long ago, she had made her peace. I accompanied her to the station. She returned the same evening, and often, when the days were long, we would make a rendezvous and go to row on the water or for a walk in the woods. She would tell me about her visit, how pretty the children were and how happy they all were together. It seemed to make her so unhappy that I redoubled my tenderness in order to make her forget her sorrow. What happy times of work and confidence we had! I suspected nothing. Everything she said appeared so true, so natural. I could reproach her with only one thing—sometimes, in telling me about the families to which her pupils belonged, she gave a quantity of intimate details and told of imaginary intrigues. She saw always the romance around her and seemed to live in dramatic combinations. These dreams troubled my happiness. I, who wished to fly far from the rest of the world to live alone with her, often found her occupied with indifferent things. But I could pardon these dreams in a woman young and unhappy, whose life had been a sad romance, without hope of a happy denouement.

Once only I became suspicious, or, rather, uneasy. One Sunday evening she did not return. I was in despair. What should I do? Go to St. Germain? I could not do that without compromising her. However, after a fearful night, I had just decided to go there when she arrived, pale and troubled. Her sister was ill; she had remained to care for her. I believed what she told me, not suspecting the flow of words which met the least questioning. Two or three times, in the same week, she returned to spend the night; finally, the sister having recovered, she again took up her regular and tranquil life.

Unhappily, some time afterward, it was her turn to fall ill. One day she came home from giving lessons, trembling, weak, feverish. Inflammation of the lungs declared itself, became more serious, and soon—the doctor told me—irremediable. I was crazed with grief. Then I thought that I would make her last hours happy. Her family, which she loved so much, of which she was so proud, I would bring to her bedside. Without saying anything to her, I wrote first to her sister at St. Germain and went myself to the grand rabbi, her uncle. When I arrived at his house, I was ushered into an antechamber, and soon the grand rabbi came to receive me.

"There are moments, sir," I began, "when hatred ought to be forgotten."

He looked at me in astonishment. I went on:

"Your niece is dying!"

"My niece! I have no niece! You are mistaken."

"I beg of you, sir, to forget that foolish quarrel. I speak of Mme. Deloche, the wife of Captain"—

"I do not know Mme. Deloche. You are mistaken, my child, I assure you." And kindly he pushed me toward the door, taking me for a lunatic or a fool.

I may have looked so, indeed. What I had heard was so terrible, so unexpected. She had lied, then. But why? Suddenly an idea struck me. I would go to the address of one of her pupils, of whom she was always talking, the daughter of a well known banker.

"Mme. Deloche," I began to the servant.

"She does not live here."

"Yes; I know that. She is the lady who gives piano lessons to the young ladies."

"There are no young ladies in the house—not even a piano. I do not know what you mean," and she closed the door in my face.

I went no farther. I was sure of receiving the same answer everywhere. Returning to our poor little home, a letter was handed me, postmarked St. Germain. I opened it, knowing already what its contents were. The general did not know Mme. Deloche. He had, moreover, neither wife nor child.

This was the last blow. So for five years every word she had uttered had been a lie. A thousand jealous thoughts seized me, and foolishly, not knowing what I did, I ran to the room where she lay dying. All the questions which tormented me poured from my lips in a torrent of words. "What did you go to St. Germain every Sunday for? At whose house have you passed your days? Where did you stay that night? Come, answer me!" And I caught hold of her, searching through her eyes into the depths of her soul. But she remained mute—passive.

I was trembling with rage. "You never gave lessons! I have been everywhere. No one knows you. Come, where did you get the money, those laces, those jewels?"

She gave me one long, sad look, and that was all. I should have spared her, I should have allowed her to die in peace. But I loved her too much. Jealously was stronger than pity.

"You have deceived me for five years," I went on. "You have lied to me every day, every hour. You know all my life, and I know absolutely nothing of yours. Nothing—not even your name! Because it is not yours, this name that you bear. Oh, liar, liar!"

She was dying, and I not to know what name to call her! "Come, now, who are you? Where did you come from? Why did you come into my life? Speak! Tell me something!"

Instead of replying she turned her face to the wall, as if she feared that her last look would give up her secret.

And thus she died—died without divulging her secret, a liar to the end!—Translated For Argonaut From the French of Alphonse Daudet.

A Famous Cook.

The fattening of poultry has been made the subject of special attention by M. Josephs, the great chef who has started a restaurant in Paris. The poultry that he uses is fed according to his own directions. It is first allowed a run of 200 yards. A few days after this is curtailed to 175 yards, and then reduced daily until the poultry is confined in boxes. Beautifully plump and fat it then is and ready for the crowned heads who honor his establishment.

To see Joseph carve one of these birds is a revelation. He holds it in midair on a fork. With his knife he then dexterously skims round the wings and legs, and before it is possible to say "Jack Robinson" every portion of the bird is carved and ready to be served.—Boston Traveller.

ROARED LIKE A LION.

A COASTER CAPTAIN'S STORY OF A REMARKABLE WHALE.

It Didn't "Blow," but Its Roar Was Something Awful—It Was Eighty Feet In Length and Had a Queer Looking Head. Tried to Swamp the Schooner.

"No," said Captain J. A. Crossman of South Portland, "we didn't encounter the sea serpent, but we had a strange experience with a whale, and I don't believe anybody ever had the like before. I've been at sea, man and boy, since I was 9 years old, and I never saw the like of the whale we encountered. I never saw a whale before that didn't blow, but the one we met didn't, but it gave a roar that was awful."

"It sounded like the lions in Central park, New York," said Miss Houston, who was one of the party that had the strange encounter.

"It certainly was more like the roar of a lion than anything else I can think of," said Captain Crossman.

The schooner Grace Webster, Captain Crossman, was on her way from New York to Portland with 414 tons of coal. Besides the captain and crew Mrs. Crossman, her daughter and Miss Houston were on board.

The schooner was about ten miles off Wood island and making good headway under full sail, the mate, Merrill Crossman, at the wheel, when there was a sudden commotion ahead, and the great head shot up into the air and was on a level with the deck.

One of the crew first sighted the strange creature and called Captain Crossman, and in a moment all on board but the man at the wheel were looking at the strange sight. They saw before them an enormous head, one mass of great bunches, through which the wicked looking eyes of the creature gleamed. They expected the whale, if such, would "blow," but it did not then or after. Once a narrow thread of what looked like steam shot up, but not a drop of water was sent into the air. As they looked at the creature it roared savagely, and then drew close up to the side of the schooner, giving them ample time to observe the head, and all agree that it was very broad; that it tapered almost to a point, and that it was not very thick through the thickest part. The creature was about 75 to 80 feet in length and had a very broad tail, very different from that of an ordinary whale. In fact, at the time there were three or four whales in sight, and they had no difficulty in noting the points of difference between them and the stranger.

The great creature went down head first and then made a series of attempts to strike the side of the schooner with its tail. It did not succeed and swam around them, roaring loudly, in evident anger. Then it went down and under the schooner.

Captain Crossman, who had watched for this movement, gave orders to be ready to lower the boat, fearing that the whale might come up under them and break them in two. It was very fortunate that they were not forced to lower their boat, as it proved later to be leaking and would not have carried half their number safely to land.

For more than an hour the whale continued its remarkable acrobatic performance, standing on its head, with its tail waving in the air most of the time. It seemed bent on hitting the schooner, and it took the best of good seamanship to prevent an encounter.

At last the whale seemed to get tired of what had been fun at first, and it headed for the westward.

Captain Crossman is of the opinion that this strange whale must have been mistaken for a sea serpent many times. Seen but a short distance off, the head would look more like that of a great serpent than of a whale.

The creature, while making its long and repeated attempts to hit the schooner, continued its roaring when above water. It would scrape against the side of the schooner and then would draw off, seem to be calculating the distance, and then strike. The schooner was kept off at the right moment, and the creature missed the vessel every time. It was an odd experience, and for a time there was something closely resembling a panic, the women being badly frightened.

Miss Houston said that the sight of that great mass standing almost upright in midocean was something not to be forgotten. Captain Crossman is uncertain whether the whale is a natural fighter or whether it was frightened when it came up out of the water, and as a result of its confusion made the repeated attempts to sink the schooner. One of the crew hit it with a bolt, and many times Captain Crossman said he could have hit it with a board from the deck. He did not venture to do anything to further arouse its anger and let it go in peace.—Portland (Me.) Press.

A Story About John Wanamaker.

I ran across my old friend Jim Biddle of the Biddles of Philadelphia yesterday, and we fell a-talking about John Wanamaker. Said Jim: "A good many years ago I was clerk in a store in Chestnut street at a salary of $75 a month. One day a dray was driven up to the door, and the driver, coming into the store, handed me an order for two bolts of cloth. It was signed 'John Wanamaker.' John was a struggling beginner then, and the house decided that it did not know him well enough to sell him the cloth on time, so I was instructed to send word that we could not deliver the goods without the money."—New York Press.

Effect of a Farce Comedy.

"Johnny," called his mother, "quit using that bad language."

"Why," replied the boy, "Shakespeare said what I just did."

"Well," replied the mother, growing infuriated, "you should quit going with him—he's no companion for you."—Louisville Post.

STAGE HORSES BRING LUCK.

Actors Like to Play in a Company that Utilizes the Animals.

There is an old theatrical superstition that horses are very lucky to have in a play, and theatrical superstitions, like all others, die hard. There are one or two leading London managers who, if they were to reveal their inmost thoughts, believe in this superstition, and to this very day. "Cut the cackle and come to the 'osses," was the favorite maxim of the celebrated Ducrow, and he had good cause to believe in "'osses," for they made him one of the most prominent men of his time.

Sir Augustus Harris is a firm believer in the horse theory, for there has not been a recent successful Drury Lane drama in which a horse has not appeared, while a great many of them have owed their success in a great measure to the introduction of the equine. In the present drama running at Drury Lane is represented for the first time in the history of the stage a polo match with trained ponies, that have often played in matches on the actual ground at Hurlingham, in the mimic representation of which, on the stage, they appear every night.

Sir Augustus Harris tells a good story of one of these ponies, a beautiful little gray, formerly the property of Sir George Scott. During one of the rehearsals the ponies were brought down near the footlights that they might get accustomed to the glare and so not get frightened during the performance at night. It so happened that one of the dummy horses that are used in the battle scene—the Last Stand—was lying on the stage. The little gray pony caught sight of it, and struggled until he got over to where it lay. He sniffed and sniffed at it for some minutes and seemed to be very much puzzled; finally, to the great amusement of everybody on the stage, he made a vicious bite at the dummy's ear, which, not being very firmly attached, came off. The pony stood still for a minute with a strange, frightened look in his eyes, and then took to his heels up the stage. For weeks afterward it was impossible to get the pony to come down anywhere near the footlights.

The largest theatrical stables in the world are those kept by a horseman near Drury Lane Theater. Here one often sees more than 100 horses that are being used for various theatrical purposes. From these stables horses are sent all over England with touring companies. Often there will be as many as 200 horses traveling in various parts of the country from this establishment alone.—Boston Traveler.

HOW ICE IS LOADED.

METHOD OF CONVEYING IT FROM HOUSE TO SHIPBOARD.

Ingenious Elevators and Runs Employed by the Large Penobscot River Concerns. A Great Deal of Labor Accomplished by a Few Hands.

An interesting operation is the loading of ice from the mammoth houses on the banks of the Penobscot into the large freight carriers that are almost constantly going up and down the river bearing heavy cargoes of frozen Penobscot to faroff ports.

From the top of the house the ice comes down in a most ingenious manner. An elevator is rigged outside the building, and on it the ice comes down by gravity. There is a counteracting force in a big weight that goes up when the load comes down, and vice versa. To the casual observer it looks as though the thing worked automatically. Two large blocks of ice are pushed out upon the elevator and they descend. As soon as they slide off, back goes the elevator for another load, and this thing is kept up hour after hour. Careful observation, however, shows a strong wire that leads off some distance, and at the end of it sits a man, and the secret is out. True enough, the thing works itself, but it needs a guiding hand so that it won't work too fast. The movements of the elevator are controlled by a friction pulley. When the ice reaches the bottom and one cake slides off, the elevator would take a run up before the other came off were it not that the man on the end of the wire pulls a lever and the friction pulley acts at the top, and the elevator waits until the cargo is all off. Then the man releases the pulley and back goes the carriage, the heavy weight at the other end carrying it rapidly to the top.

From the elevator the ice slides into a run. In the center of that is an endless chain that it fitted with pronglike attachments at certain intervals, and as they come along they come up behind the cake of ice and carry it to its destination.

A short distance up the run is a planer, a simple contrivance that removes the snow ice and evens the blocks so that they will pack nicely in the hold of the vessel. The cakes of ice pass serenely along, and when they come to the planer pass easily under it, but at the same time they lose two or three inches of their height. There is a provision in the contracts that provides for this, and they read that only an inch or inch and a half, or whatever the amount is, of snow ice shall be left on the cake, and therefore the planing.

Just beyond the planer is a man who gives the cake a quick pull that brings it ahead of the prong for a moment. A second look shows why this is done. By this quick movement the cake of ice is brought upon a pair of scales, and in the second's rest that it has before the prong on the chain gets along it is weighed and the figures placed upon the record that is being kept of the cargo. It is no small job to weigh the ice, for the cakes come along in rapid succession, and the weight has to be ascertained in the ordinary manner and the result put down before the next cake gets along.

From the scale the journey to the vessel is uninterrupted. The run is arranged so that it extends over the vessel to the hatchway, and the rise and fall of the tide are provided for by an arrangement that permits of the rising and falling of the run to correspond.

Perhaps the most ingenious thing of the whole system is that by which the ice is put in the hold. At the end of the run and directly over the hatchway is a strong frame, and in that there works a platform that goes up and down something like an elevator at the house. Two blocks of ice are slid upon it directly from the run, and the man who controls it releases a friction lever, and down it goes into the hold by its own weight, the speed being controlled by the man with the friction lever. The platform is suspended by four ropes that unwind from a cylinder as it descends, and at the same time another and larger rope that appears from a distance winds upon the cylinder.

When the load is off the platform in the hold, the friction lever is again loosened, and the rope that comes over the side of the vessel gets in its work by turning the drum the other way and quickly bringing the platform into its place. Out on the wharf at the other end of the big rope is another large weight, that does the work of pulling back the platform.

Away down in the hold the work of stowing the ice was progressing rapidly. The ice is simply packed together in as small a space as possible, and nothing is put around it, as many doubtless suppose. At the hatches, after the cargo is all in, a little hay is thrown, but with the exception of that there is nothing put about the ice to keep it from melting. Under the improved order of packing only from 10 to 15 per cent of the ice is melted, and at times not so much as that.—Bangor Commercial.

A Sure Cure.

Mrs. Minks—Doctor, my husband is a terrible sufferer from insomnia, and some nights cannot sleep a wink. Can you do anything for him?

Doctor—Certainly, madam. In the first place, he must go to bed not later than 10 o'clock.

"He does that."

"Very well. Wait until he appears to be in a doze, and then suddenly give him a shake and tell him it is time to go down and fix the kitchen fire. He'll turn over, give a grunt, and sleep like a log till morning."—New York Weekly.

Wickwire—There can be no doubt that the horse is rapidly passing.

Mudge—Mebbe, but the ones I bet on don't seem to pass anything very much.—Indianapolis Journal.

HER FIRST REHEARSAL.

Mary Anderson de Navarro Tells of the Preliminaries of Her Stage Debut.

In writing of her first appearance on the stage Mary Anderson de Navarro tells in The Ladies' Home Journal that the opportunity to play was presented her by Manager McCauley at his Louisville theater. The star who was playing at the theater had failed to attract paying houses, and Dr. Griffin, who was Mrs. de Navarro's stepfather and her business manager, suggested to Mr. McCauley that she be given a chance to play. The offer was gladly accepted, and Mrs. de Navarro writes that there was only one rehearsal, and it was called for the next morning. "On my way to the cathedral," she adds, "I was enchanted to see posters on the fences making the announcement. The main part of the poster was devoted to advertising Milnes Levick in 'The Spy,' and at the bottom in smaller type the show bill read:

"Saturday Evening, Nov. 27, 1875.—Miss Mary Anderson, a young lady of this city, will make her first appearance on any stage as Juliet, in Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet;' Milnes Levick as Mercutio, and a powerful cast of characters.

"As I was in the quiet church the hour for rehearsal struck, and I started for the theater in a radiant frame of mind. Passing with my people through the darkened house and private boxes covered with their linen dusters, I found myself for the first time upon the stage. How strange and dreamlike it seemed, that empty theater, lighted only here and there by the faint glimmer of the gray day without, bereft of all the eager faces it had always been peopled with! And the stage! How dismal it was with the noisy patter of the rain on its tin roof, a small gas jet burning in the center, throwing a dingy light on the men and women (they did not relish the extra rehearsal), gloomily standing in the wings. On seeing me, all looked surprised. Some made remarks in whispers, which I felt to be unkind; others laughed audibly. Scarcely 16, my hair in a long braid, my frock reaching to my boot tops, tall, shy and awkward, I may have given them cause for merriment, but it was as cruel, I thought, as underbred, to make no effort to conceal their mirth at my expense. However, their rudeness was salutary in its effect, putting me on my mettle before the work began."

Keeping Employees Honest.

"Distrust probably makes more thieves than were ever evolved by the laws of heredity," said a gentleman recently who has a business in which he employs a large number of men, all holding positions in which the element of trust is peculiarly great. "In my business I always make my men understand that I have the utmost confidence in them, and the result of this has been that I have never had an employee exhibit the least dishonest trait.

"Put a man on his honor and make him know that he is not being watched, but being trusted, and he will rarely, unless disposed to it by heredity, steal. Of course some men are born thieves and should never be trusted. They steal because the influence is too great for them to resist. Often surrounding a man with all sorts of devices and systems to prevent him from stealing has the effect of causing him to look out for a way of beating the bank. We are all strangely susceptible to that much talked of force, suggestion—more than we appreciate—and when the very environment in which we work suggests dishonesty every minute it is not much wonder that it has a very positive effect upon the mind in causing it to think dishonestly."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Intimate Friend of Hornets.

It is Mrs. Brightwen's privilege to be unusually well placed for the minute study of living creatures, and her pets have included lemurs, an ichneumon, squirrels, doves, owls, tortoises and so on. Squirrels and birds she has lured from the woods and won their affection by kindness, and in addition to giving many particulars about these she has something to say about studying nature, teaching children to be humane and the pleasures of insect observation, etc. That insects can discriminate between friends and enemies is, she holds, true, and she remembers once in a country village seeing a man hard at work thrashing corn in a barn, and quite near to him there was an immense hornets' nest hanging from a beam. When asked if he was not afraid of them, he smiled and said: "Oh, they know me well enough. One of 'em fell inside my shirt the other day, but he was very ceevil and never stung me, for I never interferes wi' them, and they never interferes wi' me."—Westminster Budget.

British Army Pensions.

The ordinary pension to the widow of a lieutenant in the army is £40, and £10 for each child. A captain's widow has £50, and £12 for each child; a lieutenant colonel's widow, £90, and £16 for each child; a general's widow, £120, and £20 for each child. If death is directly traced to fatigue, privation or exposure, the pensions are increased by half as much again; if the officer is killed in action, or dies of wounds within 12 months of the battle, the pensions are doubled. The ordinary pensions are not granted if the officer was 25 years older than his wife.—London Echo.

Speed No Object.

"What do you think of my new bays?"

"Why, they're beautiful animals, but they can't trot for shucks."

"Oh, well, I don't care for that part of it."

"You don't?"

"No. If they could do a mile a minute, the boulevard police would hold 'em down to eight miles an hour anyhow."—Chicago Record.

Have Had Fourteen Indian Wars.

Our government has had 14 great Indian wars, which are estimated to have cost not less than $150,000,000 and as much more in private loss was sustained by individuals.

AUTUMN SONG.

A song of the reaping time,
Of the feast days of the year;
A song of the grain and the well filled wain,
And the husking time that's near.
Here's hey, for a merry romp
In the brown old fields and vales!
And ho, for the mead where the cattle feed!
And ho, for the autumn gales!
A hunt through the tall, dim woods
For the fruit of the oak and vine,
A peep at the nest of the last redbreast
And a call where the chipmunks dine.
A smile in the morning skies,
And a laugh in the streams that flow
As they share their joy with the girl and boy
That today may a-rambling go.

—Frank Walcott Hutt in St. Nicholas.

WHAT THE GRAND DUKE HEARD.

European Officers Discussed the Capture of American Cities.

The Grand Duke Alexis was at Kiel. He is a full Russian admiral now, and the head of the Russian navy. He was a frequent visitor to the Americans, and, like all the other notables, talked with the utmost frankness to our officers.

One day, watching the Columbia as she rode the waves as lightly and with the easy grace of a blue wing teal, the grand duke said to a captain: "I'm glad you Americans are rebuilding your fleet. Do you know what most impressed me when I visited your country? Let me tell you. The first thing was your wonderful national wealth; the second, the absolutely inadequate means at your disposal for national defense. You were like a drunken man with pockets full of money and two or three hungry ruffians on the dark side of the street waiting a chance to attack him."

"Why, do you mean to say"— began the somewhat startled captain, when the Russian put his hand on the other's arm and said: "Twice in my career I have heard the project of capturing one or two of your great cities and holding them for ransom deliberately discussed by officers of European fleets whose countries had hard work to make ends meet. And they meant it too. I once made a sensation when, after listening to a conversation of this kind, in which the officers of four different fleets took part, I said: 'Gentlemen, the United States and Russia are friends. Should she be unjustly attacked, Russia would help to see that the wrong was righted.' Ah, I can't tell you where or who it was. Come over to the Kurik [the Russian flagship] and have a glass of wine."—Washington Post.

The Faust Legend.

Almost every renowned man of antiquity in the middle ages was believed to be attended by a spiritus familiaris, and not a few were suspected of being in direct league with the devil. Probably the oldest legend of which the Faust legend is a continuous thread is that of Simon Magus, mentioned in the history of the apostles.

According to Justin, he was a native of Gitton, a village in Samaria. He was, no doubt, a man of great intellectual powers. He was the father of the school of the Gnostics. It is also reported of him that he could make himself invisible, that he could pass through flames unharmed, could transpose matter, make gold and exorcise demons—in fact, he laid claim to all these powers and his name lived in the mouths of the people as a sort of Demiurg through many centuries until some other miracle working personality took his place at the popular fireside. Unusual accomplishments, great erudition, were attributed to the supernatural influence, and the general disposition to superstitious assumption was strengthened on the one hand by dogmatic affirmation on the part of the church of the existence of a personal satan, with his numerous household, and, on the other hand, by incorporating the magic arts among the practical sciences, of which astrology and alchemy occupied no mean part.—Menorah.

Edmund Halley.

Probably the greatest service which Halley ever rendered to human knowledge was the share which he took in bringing Newton's "Principia" before the world. In fact, as Dr. Glaisher, writing in 1888, has truly remarked, "but for Halley the 'Principia' would not have existed."

Halley had the genius to perceive the tremendous importance of Newton's researches, and he ceased not to urge upon the somewhat recluse man of science the necessity for giving his discoveries publication. Having been authorized by the Royal society to undertake the printing of the book at his own expense, Halley spared no pains in pushing forward the publication of his illustrious friend's great work, so much so that in the same year he was in a position to present a complete copy to King James II, with a proper discourse of his own. Halley also wrote a set of Latin hexameters, in praise of Newton's genius, which he printed at the beginning of the work. The last line of this specimen of Halley's poetic muse may be thus rendered, "Nor mortals nearer may approach the gods."—Sir Robert Ball in Good Words.

Eighteen Hundred Years After Death.

When the pick used by the excavator at Pompeii gives forth a hollow sound when striking the great bed of lava, care is immediately taken to open the cavity that is known to be near. Into this cavity liquid plaster of paris is poured. The cavity serves as a mold, and the plaster soon hardens. When the lava has been removed, the statue obtained usually proves to be that of a woman or man in the agonizing convulsions of death, the limbs contorted and the features drawn out of shape just as they were when the person was overtaken by the flood of redhot lava 1,800 years ago.—St. Louis Republic.

Punishment.

Lucy—The wretch! And so he has been proposing to both of us?

Jenny—It seems so.

Lucy—I wish we could think of some fearful way to punish him.

Jenny—I have an idea.

Lucy—What is it?

Jenny—You marry him, dear.—Pick Me Up.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF ALASKA.

The rush into the Yukon has begun. The first party of miners to take the trail left Juneau about the middle of January. There were nine men in the party. This is an unusually early start for miners. A good many others in town are getting ready for the trip, intending to tackle the range about the middle of March. Every steamer that comes in from below now brings a party of old-timers and crowds of new men, all anxious to get in and get to work. The Yukon country is almost certain to be overcrowded this summer, surely as regards winter supplies, unless large outfits are taken in from here by the miners. From all accounts received here from sections along the Pacific Coast and in the East, Alaska is destined to receive a rush of people this summer which will not be consistent with the present progress and the amount of work now going on. Alaska at present can support so many people and no more, and if the rush pans out according to present prospects there is likely to be considerable hardships. Alaska has no industries except mining, at which the wage-earner can make decent livlihood, and unless a man has sufficient means to carry him through, either in some business or for a season's prospecting, he had better steer clear of this country. It requires some capital to prospect for a mining claim, and when the claim is found it requires more capital to open it up. Gold nuggets do not grow on bushes, and it takes both a man's hands and his pockets to get the yellow mettal in this country. There's an almighty lot of it here, but it isn't to be had for the asking. It is perhaps timely now to tell something explicit about the way of getting into the Yukon and the difficulties of the trip. No one should think of coming to Alaska who has not perfect health and has not, moreover, a more than ordinary strong constitution, to enable him to withstand the atmospheric and climatic changes. In the Yukon district the thermometer has an annual range of 180 degrees. There is a time in the short summer when it ranges about 110 degrees above zero, and in the winter it frequently goes down to 70 degrees below, and sometimes more. No one should come to Alaska who has not some practical knowledge of quartz and placer mining. Theories are all right in their way, and a theorist may stumble upon something good, but it is the practical prospector who gets the Alaskan nuggets every time. Every unfavorable report of Alaska mines can be traced directly to some disappointed tenderfoot who thought he could come up here and pick the gold off the bushes. Most of them don't like it because they found they couldn't get nuggets as easily as they could salmon berries. Anybody can tell gold after the smelter gets through with it, but it isn't so easy to know where to look for and how to find it. If you are contemplating making the trip into the Yukon you want to give careful consideration to these things: The length of time you will have to stay in the country, the amount of money it will take, and the result which may be attained. Briefly, these things are: Time, three years; money, $500; results, unlimited. Little can be accomplished in less than three years' stay in the Yukon unless the prospector has marvelously good luck. A good part of the first season will be consumed in reaching the mines. Then if a claim is is discovered and located only preliminary work can be done. The second year the claim can be opened up well, and probably some mony can be made. The third year is when the prospector may reasonably expect to get his profits. No man ought to make the start into the Yukon basin with less than $500 above what he expects to spend for the outfit which shall cary him through to the diggings. That is if he goes by way of Juneau and over the pass, he wants to have $500 when he gets to Forty Mile or Circle City, or wherever it is he is going. If he goes by the way of St. Michael's and up the Yukon he wants to have just the same money. The road is long one whichever way he goes. Supplies are expensive. The season is short, and fortune is fickle. Failure to find gold the first season is likely to entail great hardship upon those whose funds are insufficient at the start. Not one in a hundred makes a paying strike the first season. The trading companies in the interior find a quick market for all their goods at spot cash prices, and they refuse absolutely to give credit. Their supply is invariably behind the demand. These are the cold-blooded facts, and if you haven't got the money to meet them you had better not try to go into the Yukon basin looking for a fortune. You won't get it. But if you've got the money, and if you are strong and healthy and ambitious are a good practical prospector, and if you've got good grit, why, come along. Here's the place where you can make a pile. There's lots of it up here, and such men are digging it out every year. It is estimated that they dug out in the Yukon district in the last season upward of $800,000, and that isn't a patch on what's there. The great basin of the Yukon is reached practically by but one route, and that by way of Juneau and the Chilcoot Pass. This is the shortest, quickest and cheapest route, and the only one taken by fully 95 per cent of the gold seekers of the interior. The first hundred miles over this route is accomplished by steam navigation from Juneau to Dyea. The next stage is made by canoe and sleigh, or by pack train twenty-seven miles, to Lake Lindeman, where boats are built in which the down stream journey is continued to the end. The start from Juneau ought to be made about the middle or not later than the third week of March, but, of course, miners do go in as late as May. Parties that start in March can do their own tranporting on sleighs across the summit of the Chilkoot Pass and down the lakes to where good timber for boatbuilding is to be found. The start can then be made down the river when when the ice breaks, which is much earlier than on the lakes. In that way the mines may be reached about a month earlier than if the boats are built on the lakes and a wait made for the ice to break there. There should be four or five men in each party. One tent, stove and a set of tools will do for all, if such an arrangement is made. One of the party ought to have some knowledge of boatbuilding, for it is an absolute necessity that the boat shall be stanch and substantial. A plain scow of good depth is all that is necessary. It can be easily built, and if it is well done it can be depended upon. No man should attempt to make the journy alone. Nothing can be of so great importance as the selection of an outfit. It is surprising what a very small difference in the quality or fashion of the articles which make up the outfit distinguishes the really excellent one from one which is absolutely valueless for purpose intended. Too much stress cannot be laid upon this point. The best place for a man who is going into the Yukon to get his outfit is right here in Juneau. The traders here have had the benefit of years of experience in furnishing just exactly the outfits that are necessary, and they beat the merchants below out of sight in getting up outfits as well as in prices. The actual price here is, of course, a little above that in Seattle or Tecoma, but by the time the prospector has got his outfit from below up here he is sure to find that it has cost him fully as much as, if not more, than a better outfit would have cost him here. Hundreds of dollars' worth of goods are thrown away on trail evey year by prospectors who are new to the country, and who have bought their outfits down below, only to find that a good portion of their goods is of no value for real service, and only encumbered them in their movements. If you've got the notion that everything in Alaska must of necessity be extremely expensive, you want to remember that there are neither rents nor taxes to be paid up here, and those items consequently do not enter into the costs of outfits. Another thing which needs to be taken into consideration in the selection of an outfit is the knowledge of the county in which the outfit is to be used. If you're going to Cook's Inlet, you don't want a Yukon outfit, and a party with a Yukon outfit would have some difficulty in getting along at Cook's Inlet. In the matter of provisions, this estimate is a fair supply for one man for one month: Baking powder,—; flour, pounds, 20; dried fruits, 5; butter, 4; tea, 1; salt, 2; milk, cans, 4; mustard,—; bacon, pounds, 12; beans, 6; dessicated eggs, 5; sugar, 5; coffee, 3; cornmeal, 5; pepper; matches. This estimate, of course, may be varied very considerably, and the simple process of multiplication will determine the amounts necessary for larger parties and for longer periods, but too much of any or all of these articles will never come amiss, and to little is only another name for hardship. Enough should be taken to cover any possible delays which may occur at any time by reason of changes in the weather or for any one of many different causes. It is, of course, necessary that nothing should be taken on a prospecting trip which will hinder or impede progress, but it is nevertheless true that every spring finds parties in the Yukon region with scanty supplies and it is a wise plan for parties to take in with them every ounce of provisions which it is possible for them to carry. The Cook's inlet territory is much easier of access than the Yukon. It is reached from Juneau by steamer or sailing craft. This place is the outfitting place for all the mining districts of the territory. Strikes were made in the Cooks inlet country last summer, which promise to develop very well this year, and it is possible that the work done there this summer will show the Cook's inlet country to be a promising rival of the great Yukon district. But the gold fields of Alaska are by no means limited to the Yukon and the Cook's sections. There is scarcely a spot in the territory where auriferious indications may not be found and to the miner of experience and ability there is no limit to the possibilities. Practically the only development of of Alaska which is possible now is mining and that is the only opportunity which is offered to outsiders for financial improvement in this Territory. Alaska has all the professional men, clerks, mechanics, and laborers that she will need or can take care of for a long time to come. Mining men with capital, and prospectors who bring a two years stake, and who can aid in the development of the county are about the only classes to whom the field is open; but to them Alaska offers splendid inducements. Wages here are not as high as commonly supposed by those on the outside, and the Indians come into competition with the common laborers everywhere. Skilled labor is only fairly paid, and the working seasons are so short that the aggregate earnings are much less than in other climates. Wages of miners in the Yukon country are $10 a day. A complete outfit for the Yukon may be had in Juneau for $60; one a great deal better can be had for $150. The last one is a guilt-edged affair. Fare from Puget sound points to Juneau is just now $12 first class and $6 second class. Fare from Juneau to Dyea is about $10; from Juneau to Cook's inlet $25. The fare from Juneau into the Yukon by way of St. Michael's is about $175, and board at the stations where stops have to be made will bring the cost up to over $200. The last party out from the Yukon last fall reported that provisions were even then not as plentiful at the posts as they should be, and the river had closed for navigation, and no more supplies could come up from the depot at St. Michael's until this spring. Their advice to all going in this spring was to take a full summer's outfit with them. This party went in last Spring and found themselves in precisely the same predicament which they advise others to avoid this year. They were compelled to move on down the river from the grounds where they wanted to prospect, and had to get their living through energetic hustling, but lost the first half of the working season in the mines. It can be relied upon that the men who are in there now with claims opened and ready to work as soon as the season opens have all their arrangements made for the summer, and if there is any likelihood of a scarcity of provisions, they are not the ones who are going to be caught. The incomers who go there light will have to hustle or move out. For the last eight years each season has found supplies short in the spring. Each year larger and better transportation boats have been put on and their number has been increasd, but the increase in the number of miners has fully kept pace with the increase in the facilities, and with all that the trading companies have done they have not been able to get ahead of the increasing demands. The last party out last fall brought some reports which might be of interest to repeat now. Another rich placer strike has been made on Birch creek, where the best diggings were made last year. The jokers in the diggings named the little tributary of Birch creek on which the strike was made "Tin Horn Creek," in recognition of the gambling proclivities of the discoverer, but they changed their tune when the prospector took out one nugget weighing $55 and in two days' rocking cleaned up $130. The entire length of the creek was located in a few day after that. On the Pelkey claim the owner set twenty-two men to panning gravel to test the value of his ground. He had them all commence at one time and pan for one hour. At the end of that time each weighed his proceeds and reported. The highest man on the list had panned out $34, and the sum total for the hour's for the twenty-two men was a little over $400. The largest nugget taken out last season was on Robert Insley's claim on Glacier creek. It weighed $234. The main articles of consumption in the Yukon last year were flour and whiskey, the number of pounds of each being about the same. The whiskey was slipped to Forty-mile in bond, and that practically put an end to the smuggling through Juneau and transportation over the pass. Up to the time that the last party left good reports had had come in from all points along the river. A lot of new creeks had been struck, and several claims that had been but recently opened panned out well. All the old claims were up to the mark. Two men gave six theatrical performances in Circle City last winter and took in $2,000. They put in last summer in getting out logs for an "opera-house," which they expect to have completed and in running order for this winter. The principal amusement in Circle City in the winter time is dancing. A miner will go into a dance hall, and, balancing the scale with $50 in dust, he will get dancing tickets for 50 cents each for that amount. Then the whole house, broken miners and all, will fill up the seats until the $50 is gone, when another miner steps up with his long sack of dust and buys a fresh supply of tickets. One of best strikes made in the Birch creek diggings last summer was made by Jack McGregor, an old Juneau man. He employed about thirty men the whole summer at $10 a day, and would have paid an ounce a day ($18) if he had had to, to keep the claim running up to the close of the season. He cleaned up $20,000 above expenses. Last spring the stores got out of potatoes, and as a consequence the miners were in danger of scurvy. Jack paid $100 for one sack of potatoes to keep his men in good shape. Circle City bids fair to be the banner camp of the interior. When the last party left there were 200 houses within the city limits. The most imposing structure had a public hall 30 by 90 feet, with a pool table in one corner and a billiard table in another. There was a wing on each side, one being used for a restaurant and the other for a bar. One hundred and twenty square logs were used in the main hall aside from the wings and gables. The Alaska Commercial Company has a store building 30 by 60 feet and two stories high, and a warehouse 20 by 100 feet, built out of corrugated iron. The North American Trading and Transportation Company's store is 24 by 50 feet. Most of the other buildings in Circle City are dirt roofed. Sodhouses are used for winter storing. They have stoves in them, which are kept burning most all winter. Wood for fuel is plenty and easily got. Napoleon Dupras has opened up a barber shop at Circle City. Shaves are 50 cents and hair-cutting 75 cents. The two may be combined for $1. Whiskey is sold at 50 cents a drink. It costs from $15 to $22.50 a gallon. There were about twenty white women at the different posts—Portland Telegram.

FARM AND FIELD AND GARDEN

THE FARM GARBAGE.

Disposing of the Sewage From the Farmhouse—The Objectionable Swill Barrel.

In reply to a query prepounded by Rural New Yorker as to the best method of disposing of sewage from the farm, several answers were elicited. A correspondent who favored the cesspool wrote: The best material for use in carrying the sewage from the farm home is glazed sewer pipe, which should be at least 6 inches in diameter and extended no less than 200 feet away from both house and well. The pipe may empty into a cesspool, both pipe and pool to be covered with earth to the depth of 2½ to 3 feet. The advantage of this method is that the disagreeable sight and odor are disposed of. The disadvantage is that it will certainly contaminate well water, providing it is near and below the pool. To avoid this difficulty run the drain pipe in such a direction that the natural flow of the water in the ground will not come in contact with the sewage and carry it to the well.

A correspondent who thinks that sewers or house drains have no place on the farm because the waste of the household is of feeding and nominal value said: The water of the weekly wash I value highly, and every drop finds its way into bowl shaped hollows about cherry, pear, plum and apple trees. Kitchen slops containing grease, particles of food, vegetable parings, etc., are excellent for moistening pig and poultry feeds. These can easily be kept separate from wash water and other slops by the use of two or more receptacles. In the case of a small family a few buckets are all that is necessary. For a large family barrels may be employed, and these can easily and quickly be wheeled away and emptied by means of a barrel cart. Ordinary slop or swill is fit for feeding only while fresh, either by itself or when mixed with meals. When allowed to stand a short time, it ferments or putrefies and is then in fit condition to cause the severest bowel diseases in pigs. The farmer who consults his best interests will always feed it while fresh.

Another farmer, who considers open drains an abomination and cesspools little better, uses slops to kindle a compost heap. Waste from the house is taken to the pigpen in a cask mounted on wheels. A convenient plan for the disposal of swill, given substitutes for the swill barrel a 30 gallon tin can with good handles on each side. A milk can that has seen brighter days will answer. It should be mounted on a three wheeled truck, with wheels 12 inches in diameter. The forward wheel is on a swivel, with a strong wrought iron tongue attached. The garbage, etc., from the kitchen are put in and the whole emptied three times a day as regular work. Keep the can covered, shutting out flies and chickens, and scrub and scald thoroughly once a week. It is an easy matter for an active boy to grasp the cart handle and run down the walk with a full can for the pigs. But how hard for the same boy to go over the same ground five or six times with two heavy pails, slopping their contents at every step on his trowers and shoes.

Green Bones For Poultry.

Green bones, gristle, flesh, etc., cut as fine as sausage meat, is not only greatly relished by fowls of all ages, but is undoubtedly a powerful stimulator to egg production. Great benefit is also derived from feeding liberal rations of this cut bone to growing chicks. It contributes to their early maturity, and pullets lay earlier in the season when they have this ration along with other feed.

It is hard work to cut up the green bones, even with the hand bone cutters, but those who practice doing it report that it pays. Farmers who do not possess a bone cutter can get along without the bone by occasionally cutting up some butcher's scraps and adding to wheat, small potatoes boiled, beets, carrots and cabbages. Others use lonemeal, stirring it in with the usual ration. Others again buy cracklings from the meatshop and chop up and feed every other day

When there is trouble from soft shelled eggs, it may be quickly remedied by a liberal use of ground raw bone and oyster shells. Bone and shells may be fed to fowls from a narrow box nailed to the side of the coop. It is less wasteful than throwing them on the ground. To use bonemeal beneficially it is necessary to mix it with the soft food. To promote laying it is necessary to have it ground coarse.

CANALS OF THE FUTURE.

They Will Be Large Enough For the Handling of a Heavy Business.

The history of the struggle between canals of small dimensions and of railroads has been the same in all countries. The fight raged bitterly for a number of years, the canals acting on the defensive, although they had as allies the states under whose patronage they were built and operated. The result has been the same in all cases—the unconditional surrender of the canals to the railroads. This, however, is not so much the fault of the system as of their management The railroads have great advantages over canals. They are better able to abridge distances both by reason of superior speed and of facilities for overcoming elevations, spanning streams, free from danger of destructive floods, and piercing through the highest mountains, but their great success is mainly due to the fact that they have kept pace with the progress of the world.

Waterways built from the beginning of the eighteenth century to the first quarter of the nineteenth century were regarded ample to meet the requirements of trade at the time they were constructed, and there was in many instances a progressive improvement in their dimensions and appurtenances. But while the industrial, agricultural and commercial developments of the world have advanced to proportions not dreamed of a century ago canals have remained stationary. They are now obsolete and can no longer fulfill the requirements of cheap transportation in competition with railroads. The canals of the future must have the dimensions and the facilities for rapid transport to adapt them to the new conditions of commerce. They must not be barge or boat canals, but ample waterways for the free passage of such ships as are now engaged in carrying the world's trade. Of such canals we have now some important types in successful operation, and others in process of construction or in completion.—Chautauquan.

The Merchants' National bank of Baltimore received the other day an old continental thirty dollar bank note. It is not known whether the note is genuine or not.

In Rome, during the days of Nerva, apples were 2 cents a dozen; cherries were 1 cent; walnuts, a half cent; chestnuts, 1 cent; cucumbers were sold at 20 for 16 cents; lettuce, at 20 heads for 30 cents, and artichokes at 20 for 60 cents.

The man who hasn't any work to do never seems to be quite happy unless he is bothering somebody else who has.

Maj. G. D. Calvert is making good improvement on his premises near Tibbetts station.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Moore are the proud parents of a boy baby who made his appearance last Monday.

Mr. Montague has erected a residence on his claim south of the school house and is domiciled therein.

Word has been received that the contract for carrying the mails from the station to Aberdeen has been let to the Star Route Association.

The widowers and batchelors of this neighborhood turned out en-masse and in one day raised and finished a house for Miss Mabel Doss on her claim near the Goodale creek. There were no prizes offered, but each one put his best foot foremost to gain notoriety as to workmanship, and we dare say their individual efforts will not be wholly lost.

On Sunday ye scribe received invitation to join a party bound for the ranch of Mr. John Committi. It was a lovely day for an outing and we enjoyed it to a large extent. Though coming unheralded and unannounced we found everything in applepie order, and a bountiful repast was soon prepared by the genial foreman Mr. Cole, to which ample justice was done. Fresh vegetables formed no small part of the menu, and claret—well, suffice is to say that if half of the party had not been strictly temperate the other half might not have been able to get home. After dinner we inspected the orchard and garden. Mr. Committi's place shows what a little energy will do to turn a wilderness in to a paradise. Strawberries are now in blossom, and the peach trees and grape vines bear evidence of much fruit in their season. We had a fine trip and will anxiously await another invitation when the fruit is ripe.

NONPAREIL.

Another Pioneer Gone.

A. N. Bell died at his residence at Camp Independence last Friday, after an illness of several weeks. Deceased was born in North Carolina in 1817, and was a pioneer of the State of California, and also of this County, he having crossed the plains and arrived in California in February, 1849. Arriving in San Francisco in the height of the gold excitement, he worked there for a while before starting for other parts of the State. He was one of the number men who discoverd Humboldt bay, and owned considerable property around Humboldt bay and in San Francisco in the early days. He spent several years in the town of Sonora, Tolumne county and other mining towns in that vicinity where he was engaged in the milling business with a brother. From there he came to Inyo County and erected the first saw-mill in the valley, which was located at Big Pine. Moving from there, he came Camp Independence and bought a mill-site and erected a flouring mill which was burned in the year 1868. The present mill was then erected on the same site in the month of July, 1870. He was married in the year 1870 to Miss Baker of Virginia, and leaves seven children, the eldest 25 and the youngst 15 years of age, also a brother and sister, both living in this State. The funeral took place last Sunday under the auspices of Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., of which the deceased had long been a valued member.

Good News For Aurora.

Ex-Governor Colcord visited Aurora last week. While there he arranged to have 20 tons of ore taken from the Esmeralda Con. mines. The ore will be taken to Bodie and treated by the cyanide process as an experiment. If it is found that a profit can be made, the Governor informs us that the company will erect a large cyanide plant near Aurora. There are unlimited quantities of low grade ore in the Aurora mines, and if the experiment proves successful a large force of men will be engaged at the mines. The Governor will return in about a week to personally superintend the working the ore and see that it is given a fair test.—Bulletin.

The Bodie Jockey Club seems to be progressing. If the scheme matures, and the present plans are carried out, it will bring many dollars to Bodie during the summer months. We have some good horses on this slope, and it is more than probable that others would come from a distance to participate in square racing. We hope that the men who are promoting the scheme will be able to carry out their ideas.—Mining Index.

The entertainment given last evening for the benefit of the Church, was fairly well attended. The program, consisting of recitations and songs, was most excellently rendered and could not have been improved upon by amatures anywhere. The icecream, cake and coffee were all that could be desired both in quantity and quality. We did not learn the amount cleared.

Ed. M Clarke will return to Bishop to live. John Clarke came down from Bishop with a six-horse team yesterday, and will return to-day with the household effects. Ed's place as Under Sheriff will be filled by George F. Willis of Bishop.

Mrs. Mary Tynan spent a couple of weeks in Independence with her brother, D. J. Hession, and at the end of last week went to Big Pine where she is now visiting with her father. Mr. Tynan is expected over in a short time.

Among the visitors from Bishop the past week were: Mr. C. B. Rawson, Mrs. H. Gifford, Miss Grace Gifford, Miss Emma Yandell, Mr. and Mrs. Will Trickey, J. W. Smith Esq. and B. H. Yaney.

Having established headquarters in San Francisco we will always have a representative in the market to take advantage of bargains and will be so in a position to give you the benefit of low prices.—Nathan Rhino. *

Estray Notice.

There came to my place at the "Tennessee Ranch," about 16 miles from Darwin, two horses described as follows: One brown, branded JE and vented JE on right hip and shoulder. One roan, branded C3 right hip. Taken up Sept. 10, 1895. The owner is hereby notified to claim his property and pay the charges upon the same, or I will, at the expiration of thirty days cause them to be sold according to law.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE.

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR" "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

"Lali," said Marion somewhat abruptly—she scarcely knew why she did it—"are you happy?"

It was strange how the Indian girl had taken on those little manners of society which convey so much by inflection. She lifted her eyebrows at Marion and said presently in a soft, deliberate voice, "Come, Marion, we will go and see little Richard; then I shall be happy."

She linked her arm through Marion's. Marion drummed her fingers lightly on the beautiful arm and then fell to wondering what she should say next. They passed into the room where the child lay sleeping. They went to his little bed, and Lali stretched out her hand gently, touching the curls of the child. Running a finger through one delicately, she said, with a still softer tone than before, "Why should not one be happy?"

Marion looked up slowly into her eyes, let a hand fall on her shoulder gently and replied, "Lali, do you never wish Frank to come?"

Lali's fingers came from the child, the color mounted slowly to her forehead, and she drew the girl away again into the other room. Then she turned and faced Marion, a deep fire in her eyes, and said in a whisper almost hoarse in its intensity, "Yes, I wish he would come tonight."

She looked harder yet at Marion. Then, with a flash of pride and her hands clasping before her, she drew herself up and added: "Am I not worthy to be his wife now? Am I not beautiful—for a savage?"

There was no common vanity in the action. It had a noble kind of wistfulness and a serenity that entirely redeemed it. Marion dated her own happiness from the time when Lali met her accident, for the evening of that disastrous day she issued to Captain Hume Vidall a commission which he could never, wished never to, resign. Since then she had been at her best—we are all more or less selfish creatures—and had grown gentler, curbing the delicate imperiousness of her nature and frankly and without the least pique taken a secondary position of interest in the household, occasioned by Lali's popularity. She looked Lali up and down with a glance in which many feelings met, and then, catching her hands warmly, she lifted them, put them on her own shoulders and said, "My dear, beautiful savage, you are fit and worthy to be queen of England, and Frank, when he comes"——

"Hush!" said the other dreamily, and put a finger on Marion's lips. "I know what you are going to say, but I do not wish to hear it. He did not love me then. He used me"— She shuddered, put her hands to her eyes with a pained, trembling motion, then threw her head back with a quick sigh. "But I will not speak of it. Come, prepare for the dance, Marion. It is the last tonight. Tomorrow"— She paused, looking straight before her, lost in thought.

"Yes, tomorrow, Lali?"

"I do not know about tomorrow," was the reply. "Strange things come to me."

Marion longed to tell her then and there the great news, but she was afraid to do so and was, moreover, withheld by the remembrance that it had been agreed she should not be told. She said nothing.

At 11 o'clock the rooms were filled. For the fag end of the season people seemed unusually brilliant. The evening itself was not so hot as common, and there was an extra array of distinguished guests. Marion was nervous all the evening, though she showed little of it, being most prettily employed in making people pleased with themselves. Mrs. Armour also was not free from apprehension.

In reply to inquiries concerning her son she said, as she had often said during the season, that he might be back at any time now. Lali had answered always in the same fashion and had shown no sign that his continued absence was singular. As the evening wore on the probability of Frank's appearance seemed less, and the Armours began to breathe more freely.

Frank had, however, arrived. He had driven straight from Euston to Cavendish square; but, seeing the house lighted up and guests arriving, he had a sudden feeling of uncertainty. He ordered the cabman to take him to his club. There he put himself in evening dress and drove back again to the house. He entered quietly. At the moment the hall was almost deserted; people were mostly in the ballroom and supper room. He paused a moment, biting his mustache as if in perplexity. A strange timidity came on him. All his old dash and self possession seemed to have forsaken him. Presently, seeing a number of people entering the hall, he made for the staircase and went hastily up. Mechanically he went to his own room and found it lighted. Flowers were set about, and everything was made ready as for a guest. He sat down, not thinking, but dazed. Glancing up, he saw his face in a mirror. It was bronzed, but it looked rather old and careworn. He shrugged a shoulder at that. Then in the mirror he saw also something else. It startled him so that he sat perfectly still for a moment looking at it. It was some one laughing at him over his shoulder—a child! He got to his feet and turned round. On the table was a very large photograph of a smiling child—with his eyes, his face. He caught the chair arm and stood looking at it a little wildly. Then he laughed a strange laugh, and the tears leaped to his eyes. He caught the picture in his hands and kissed it—very foolishly men not fathers might think—and read the name beneath, "Richard Joseph Armour," and again, beneath that, the date of birth. He then put it back on the table and sat looking at it—looking and forgetting and remembering.

He caught the picture in his hands and kissed it.

Presently the door opened, and some one entered. It was Marion. She had seen him pass through the hall. She had then gone and told her father and mother, to prepare them, and had followed him up stairs. He did not hear her. She stepped softly forward. "Frank," she said, "Frank," and laid a hand on his shoulder. He started up and turned his face on her; then he caught her hands and kissed her. "Marion!" he said, and he could say no more, but presently he pointed toward the photograph.

She nodded her head. "Yes, it is your child, Frank, though of course you don't deserve it. Frank, dear," she added, "I am glad—we shall all be glad—to have you back, but you are a wicked man." She felt she must say that.

Now he only nodded and still looked at the portrait. "Where is—my wife?" he added presently.

"She is in the ballroom." Marion was wondering what was best to do.

He caught his thumbnail in his teeth. He winced in spite of himself. "I will go to her," he said, "and then the baby."

"I am glad," she replied, "that you have that much sense of justice left, Frank—the wife first, the baby afterward, but do you think you deserve either?"

He became moody and made an impatient gesture. "Lady Agnes Martling is here, and also Lady Haldwell," she persisted, cruelly. She did not mind, because she knew he would have enough to compensate him afterward.

"Marion," he said, "say it all and let me have it over. Say what you like, and I'll not whimper. I'll face it. But I want to see my child."

She was sorry for him. She had really wanted to see how much he was capable of feeling in the matter. "Wait here, Frank," she said. "That will be best, and I will bring your wife to you."

He said nothing, but assented with a motion of the hand, and she left him where he was. He braced himself for the interview. Assuredly a man loses something of natural courage and self confidence when he has done a thing of which he should be and is ashamed.

It seemed a long time—it was in reality but a couple of minutes—before the door opened again, and Marion said, "Frank, your wife!" and then retreated.

The door closed, leaving a stately figure standing just inside it. The figure did not move forward, but stood there, full of life and fine excitement, but very still also.

Frank Armour was confounded. He came forward slowly, looking hard. Was this distinguished, handsome, reproachful woman his wife, Lali, the Indian girl whom he had married in a fit of pique and brandy? He could hardly believe his eyes. And yet her eyes looked out at him with something that he remembered, too, together with something which he did not remember, making him uneasy. Clearly his great mistake had turned from ashes into fruit. "Lali, my wife!" he said, and held out his hand.

She reached out hers courteously, but her fingers gave him no response.

"We have many things to say to each other," she said, "but they cannot be said now. I shall be missed from the ballroom."

"Missed from the ballroom!" He almost laughed to think how strange this sounded in his ears. As if interpreting his thought, she added: "You see, it is our last affair of the season, and we are all anxious to do our duty perfectly. Will you go down with me? We can talk afterward."

Her continued self possession utterly confused him. She had utterly confused Marion also when told that her husband was in the house. She had had presentiments, and besides she had been schooling herself for this hour for a long time. She turned toward the door.

"But," he asked like a supplicant, "our child? I want to see our child."

She lifted her eyebrows. Then, seeing the photograph of the baby on the table, understood how he knew. "Come with me, then," she said, with a little more feeling.

She led the way through the hall and paused at her door. "Remember that we have to appear among the guests directly," she said, as though to warn him against any demonstration. Then they entered. She went over to the cot and drew back the fleecy curtain from over the sleeping boy's head. His fingers hungered to take his child to his arms. "He is magnificent, magnificent!" he said, with a great pride. "Why did you never let me know of it?"

"How could I tell what you would do?" she calmly replied. "You married me wickedly and used me wickedly afterward, and I loved the child."

"You loved the child!" he repeated after her. "Lali," he said, "I don't deserve it, but forgive me, if you can—for the child's sake."

"We had better go below," she calmly replied. "We have both duties to do. You will of course appear with me—before them?"

The slight irony in the tone cut him horribly. He offered his arm in silence. They passed into the hall and to the staircase. "It is necessary," she said, "to appear cheerful before one's guests."

She had him at an advantage at every point. "We will be cheerful, then," was his reply, spoken with a grim kind of humor. "You have learned it all, haven't you?" he added.

They were just entering the ballroom. "Yes, with your kind help—and absence," she replied.

The surprise of the guests was somewhat diminished by the fact that Marion, telling General Armour and his wife first of Frank's return, industriously sent the news buzzing about the room.

The two went straight to Frank's father and mother. Their parts were all excellently played. Then Frank mingled among the guests, being very heartily greeted, and heard congratulations on all sides. Old club friends rallied him as a deserter and new acquaintances flocked about him, and presently he awakened to the fact that his Indian wife had been an interest of the season and was not the least admired person present. It was altogether too good luck for him, but he had an uncomfortable conviction that he had a long path of penance to walk before he could hope to enjoy it.

All at once he met Lady Haldwell, who, in spite of all, still accepted invitations to General Armour's house, the strange scene between Lali and herself having never been disclosed to the family. He had nothing but bitterness in his heart for her, but he spoke a few smooth words, and she languidly congratulated him on his bronzed appearance. He asked for a dance, but she had not one to give him. As she was leaving she suddenly turned as though she had forgotten something, and looking at him said: "I forgot to congratulate you on your marriage. I hope it is not too late."

He bowed. "Your congratulations are so sincere," he said, "that they would be apropos late or early."

When he stood with his wife while the guests were leaving and saw with what manner she carried it all off—as though she had been born in the good land of good breeding—he was moved alternately with wonder and shame—shame that he had intended this noble creature as a sacrifice to his ugly temper and spite. When all the guests were gone and the family stood alone in the drawing room, a silence suddenly fell among them. Presently Marion said to her mother in a half whisper, "I wish Richard were here."

They all felt the extreme awkwardness of the situation, especially when Lali bade General Armour, Mrs. Armour and Marion good night and then, turning to her husband, said, "Good night." She did not even speak his name. "Perhaps you would care to ride tomorrow morning. I always go to the park at 10, and this will be my last ride of the season."

CARVED IN THE BARK.

A Clump of Trees Upon Which Appeared the Names of Many Soldiers.

"I don't quite understand, and I never could," said an observer, "what prompts people to write their names in public places. Trees have always been favorite objects upon which to carve names, and the smooth bark of the beech offers a field most inviting to the knife of the carver. I saw once a bunch of beech trees upon which thousands of names had been cut. This was in Virginia, close by the left bank of the James river. A ravine made back from the river, and at the head of this ravine there was a spring. Around the spring was this clump of beech trees.

"The names carved on these trees were those of soldiers who had been encamped thereabout in the time of the civil war and who had come to this spring for water. It was in 1879 that I saw them, so that they must have been there then at least 14 years. They had probably been there longer. About a third of the names were still legible. Many of them were the names of men of Pennsylvania regiments. Those that had become illegible were mainly those that had been carved on smaller trees.

"There was one big tree that had upon it, I should think, 500 names. They encircled it for 20 feet up from the ground. It seemed as if some of those among the highest must have been cut by men who swung down from the first branch, and one could imagine that men stood on one another's shoulders to reach above the names already carved by men standing on the ground, or that perhaps there was led up beside the tree a horse upon whose back the carver stood.

"These names may have been carved, every one of them, simply as a pastime, and yet it seemed somehow as though this was a case in which the carving might have been done in something more than a merely idle spirit."—New York Sun.

MRS. PEARY WAS FRIGHTENED.

It Was When She Went Hunting Walrus With Her Husband.

Mrs. Peary, wife of the famous arctic explorer, declares she has had more than enough of the polar regions, and is determined that her husband shall never repeat his travels in those frigid lands. When asked what experience stands out most prominently in connection with the unusual life while exploring, Mrs. Peary, without a moment's hesitation, said: "Our hunting the walrus. It is the only occasion in my life when I was so frightened that I would have welcomed death as a relief. We were out in a boat with Dr. Cook, Mat, and some natives. Mr. Peary had broken his leg, but was steering the boat, his leg, in splints, stretched out before him. We saw the walrus coming toward us, and when the natives said, 'Shoot at them,' we took our rifles and did so.

"Then followed a scene too terrible for words. The bullets had only entered the hides of these animals, enough to infuriate them, and they came forward enraged and with but one determination—to turn over the boat. They placed their long tusks on the gunwale and attempted to tip us out. I crouched at the bottom of the skiff, loading the rifles, so that the men would not have to wait a second. The sea was crimson with their blood, and for a few moments I did not know whether I should be shot by the excited men or drowned by the walruses. We killed about 17, and have some of the tusks. But don't let me talk about it any more. All that is past."—Philadelphia Times.

A New Application of Scripture.

There was rejoicing in the village at the killing of a pig. Being dead, it was cut up. A neighbor's cat stole secretly into the larder, and annexed a piece of pork, which she brought in triumph to her mistress. Next day the clergyman of the parish visited the old woman, who recounted to him the remarkable sagacity of the beast. "It was quite beautiful, sir," she said piously, "to see the way the sweet creature brought me the piece of pork; it brought to my mind what we read in the Bible about Elijah and the ravens."—Realm.

Speaking From Experience.

Little Nan of four summers, considering it her duty to entertain a lady who is waiting for mamma, enters into conversation.

Nan—Have you any little girls?

The Caller—Yes, I have two.

Nan—D-do you ever have to whip 'em?

The Caller—I'm afraid I have to sometimes.

Nan—What do you whip 'em with?

The Caller (amused)—Oh, when they've been very naughty, I take my slipper.

Nan (most feelingly as mamma enters)—Y-yo-you ought to take a hairbrush. My mamma does, and it hurts awfully.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

A vagabond was originally only a traveler or person who went from place to place with or without a definite object.

FROST, FROLIC AND BUSINESS.

The wind over frozen ponds and lakes, over snow-fields of plains and open country, is heavily charged with frost and fine particles of frozen matter. It is the most penetrating way for chill to set in. Sudden warmth, sudden chill, and severe colds. Girls and boys skating, driving for pleasure or business, and men at work afield know the difference in temperature. Yet the youngsters skate away and with mouth open laughing take in a dose of sore throat. Drivers and workmen throw aside wraps and all know the next day from soreness and stiffness what sudden chill means. Now the best thing to do when housed is to rub well at once with St. Jacobs' Oil. If you do, you will not have sore throat; or if you are stiff and sore, it will cure by warming the surface to throw out the chill.

He Will Not Drown Himself.

(From the Troy, N. Y., Times.)

R. W. Edwards, of Lansingburgh, was prostrated by sunstroke during the war and it has entailed on him peculiar and serious consequences. At present writing Mr. E. is a prominent officer of Post Lyon, G. A. R., Cohoes and a past aid de camp on the staff of the commander-in-chief of Albany Co. In the interview with a reporter, he said:

"I was wounded and sent to the hospital at Winchester. They sent me together with others to Washington—a ride of about 100 miles. Having no room in the box cars we were placed face up on the bottom of flat cars. The sun beat down upon our unprotected heads. When I reached Washington I was insensible and was unconscious for ten days while in the hospital. An abscess gathered in my ear and broke; it has been gathering and breaking ever since. The result of this 100 mile ride and sunstroke, was, heart disease, nervous prostration, insomnia and rheumatism; a completely shattered system which gave me no rest night or day. As a last resort I took some Pink Pills and they helped me to a wonderful degree. My rheumatism is gone, my heart failure, dyspepsia, and constipation are about gone and the abscess in my ear has stopped discharging and my head feels as clear as a bell when before it felt as though it would burst and my once shattered nervous system is now nearly sound. Look at those fingers," Mr. Edwards said, "do they look as if there was any rheumatism there?" He moved his fingers rapidly and freely and strode about the room like a young boy. "A year ago those fingers were gnarled at the joints and so stiff that I could not hold a pen. My knees would swell up and I could not straighten my leg out. My joints would squeak when I moved them. That is the living truth.

"When I came to think that I was going to be crippled with rheumatism, together with the rest of my ailments, I tell you life seemed not worth living. I suffered from despondency. I cannot begin to tell you," said Mr. Edwards, as he drew a long breath, "what my feeling is at present. I think if you lifted ten years right off my life and left me prime and vigorous at forty-seven I could feel no better. I was an old man and could only drag myself painfully about the house. Now I can walk off without any trouble. That in itself," continued Mr. Edwards, "would be sufficient to give me cause for rejoicing, but when you come to consider that I am no longer what you might call nervous and that my heart is apparently nearly healthy and that I can sleep nights you may realize why I may appear to speak in extravagant praise of Pink Pils. These pills quiet my nerves, take that awful pressure from my head and at the same time enrich my blood. There seemed to be no circulation in my lower limbs a year ago, my legs being cold and clammy at times. Now the circulation there is as full and as brisk as at any other part of my body. I used to be so light-headed and dizzy from my nervous disorder that I frequently fell while crossing the floor of my house. Spring is coming and I never felt better in my life, and I am looking forward to a busy season of work."

Costume and Mortality.

A remarkable effect of costume on mortality is shown in a very instructive manner by one of the English registrar general's reports. It appears that among children aged from 1 to 5 years there is an equality in the number of deaths by scalds and burns among boys and girls, but from 5 to 10 double the number of girls to that of boys die from these causes, while from 10 to 20 there die 102 women and only 27 men, and from 20 upward 71 women and 22 men, showing the influence of muslin and flounce in producing death, notwithstanding the greater caution of the female sex.

March

April, May are most emphatically the months for taking a good blood purifier, because the system is now most in need of such a medicine, and because it more quickly responds to medicinal qualities. In winter impurities do not pass out of the body freely, but accumulate in the blood.

April

The best medicine to purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and thus give strength and build up the system, is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands take it as their Spring Medicine, and more are taking it today than ever before. If you are tired, "out of sorts," nervous, have bad taste in the morning, aching or dizzy head, sour stomach and feel all run down, a course of Hood's Sarsaparilla will put your whole body in good order and make you strong and vigorous. It is the ideal Spring Medicine and true nerve tonic, because

A BRITON'S LUGGAGE.

ATTEMPTS OF AMERICAN IMITATORS TO INTRODUCE IT HERE.

Ponderous British Hat Boxes, Portmanteaus and Hold Alls—The Baggage on a Steamship Wharf Is a Study—The Traveler and His Bathtub.

As the traveling Briton is known in this country by his luggage, so the American woman was once hated in Europe because of her saratoga trunk. The world has escaped the general adoption of the saratoga trunk, but a worse thing seems possible, as British luggage threatens to become international. Even now you may buy in this town all the impedimenta with which the traveling Briton cumbers himself and bedevils the rest of mankind. A Broadway trunkmaker has for some years past undertaken to fix the thraldom of these things upon his fellow country men and women, and many traveling Americans, especially the wealthy and fashionable, are to be recognized by the multiplicity of British impedimenta that they carry to and fro in their frequent journeyings between the old world and the new. More curious still, those clever and imitative Japanese have begun to produce British luggage identical with the original in the minutest details, even down to hand sewed straps on leather trunks, portmanteaus and the like; but, drolly enough, the whole outfit is merely a paper counterfeit of the real thing.

American imitators of things British, lacking the fine humor of the Japanese, have made no substitution of light material for heavy, but have taken on the full burden of ponderous British hatboxes, portmanteaus, rugs, bags, hold alls and even bathtubs. It was a traveling American who gave to the world an account of a refreshing scene on board a Mediterranean steamer bound to Tangier or some such Mohammedan port of north Africa. A British passenger with his bathtub had nearly pestered the life out of a meek, coffee colored Mohammedan, who accepted the Briton's curses without a sign of reproach, but when in the course of getting the luggage ashore the precious bathtub fell overboard and sank like lead, the harmless follower of the prophet was seen to pause in his work and dance gleefully upon the deck, exclaiming in triumph, "Oh, Mr. Goddam, Mr. Goddam!" It is since that incident that traveled Americans in their aping of British ways have accepted even the burden of the bathtub.

A study of baggage at a steamship wharf or even at a large railway station in New York is an instructive lesson as to the cosmopolitan character of the city. There is one article of British luggage that seldom survives more than one journey within the limits of the United States and sometimes gets no farther inland than the New York hotel at which the traveler makes his first stop. This article is the little trunk or box of japanned tin much used by travelers in Great Britain. The flimsy trifle hardly survives the first encounter with the American baggage handler, and after the first journey of 600 miles in this country is battered out of all resemblance to its original rectilinear self. It is an article of luggage not suitable to the exigencies of American travel.

A pathetic feature of the baggage at the railway stations that are doorways to the west is the immigrant's luggage. Sometimes it is a mattress from the steerage wrapped about the few belongings of the new made American. Again it is the corded box of the Irish, English or Scotch immigrant. It will be recalled how important a preliminary to Charlotte Bronte's journeyings out into the great world from her Yorkshire home was the cording of her box. The corded box is as rare among the luggage of an American traveler as the old hair trunk, though both are occasionally seen. The seaman's locker, rectilinear for a stable stowage and strong against accidents, figures in the luggage at steamship wharves. One knows instinctively its contents of old clothes, protographs, curios, tobacco and long treasured letters from home and the array of pictures from the illustrated papers pasted on the inside of the lid.

The elaborate dressing cases that some Americans and all well to do Englishmen used to travel with are going out of fashion. It is almost a necessity that the traveler with this pretty piece of luggage take along a valet, for the thing weighs like so much lead and is too precious to be trusted to the tender mercies of the baggage department. The traveling desk also has nearly disappeared, though some ingenious trunkmakers now produce trunks that open so as to form desks. The luncheon hamper that used to accompany every traveler across this continent in the days before dining cars came into use has almost entirely disappeared. The California millionaires of early transcontinental travel carried enormous and richly laden hampers and dispensed often a princely hospitality to their fellow travelers. The dinner hour on board a transcontinental train was a picturesque incident of travel in those days. The traveling Briton in Europe still sometimes carries his luncheon hamper, and it is often one of the nuisances of European travel.

Some of the English theatrical companies have become so used to traveling in America that they have adopted our methods with baggage. They accept with grace the great American trunk, dispense with the hatbox, the bathtub, the rugs, shawl straps and the rest and calmly see their belongings carted off by a stranger, who leaves behind as evidence only a bit of brass bearing a few letters and numbers.—New York Sun.

Wheeler—And don't you think the bicycle will ever be useful in warfare?

Walker—No. I doubt if it will ever get farther than its present status as a mere instrument for assault and battery.—Indianapolis Journal.

EXIT THE BLUEJACKET.

In Modern Steam Battleships Athletic Sailors Play a Minor Part.

A proportion of the bluejackets of any fully rigged ship were necessarily athletes. The "upper yardmen" in a line of battle ship or a frigate were exceptional men in this way, and much more so perhaps just about the time that sail power was receiving its death warrant than ever before. These young men had to race aloft to nearly the highest points, at top speed, eight or ten times a week when the ship was in harbor, to keep their heads and maintain their breath while "holding on by their eyelids," as the phrase went, and manipulating with a careful and measured order of action the various and intricate arrangements for "crossing" or "sending down" the royal and topgallant yards. It was all done at full speed, for it was universally held that the upper yardmen gave a character to the whole ship and that one which was foremost in this exercise was ever considered "the smartest ship in the fleet." The upper yardmen were always the coming men. They had most opportunities for distinguishing themselves, were the best known, and were most under the eye of the authorities. They developed great muscular power in chest, shoulders and arms. Their lower extremities suffered, and one always knew the men who had been upper yardmen by their tadpolelike appearance when they were bathing.

But in the modern steam line of battle ship and frigate these extremely athletic specimens formed a very small minority of the "ship's company," and none of them could lose his turn at being upper yardman so long as the ship's reputation depended on the speed with which the upper yards were crossed and sent down. In harbor the rest of the bluejackets had the handling of yards and sails for exercise once or twice a week, but at sea the use of sails for propulsion grew less and less important, and most of the work aloft was more of an exercise and less of a necessity.—North American Review.

CRACKERS FOUND ALL OVER.

Wanderers of the Tribe In the West and North as Well as the South.

"You'll find crackers in other parts of the country than the south," said the tall, grizzled sea captain like man at the inn. "I've seen them in every land—yes, and on Long Island. I take it the cracker belongs to a class by himself. The crackers, all the way from the foothills of the Alleghanies in Lancaster county, Pa., to the mountains of Georgia, are, as I take it, the descendants of men from the north of Ireland. Some of them reached this state from Canada and went south by way of the old Cherry Valley turnpike into Pennsylvania, and thence into Maryland and Virginia. They are the best of the cracker tribe. They still have some of the religion they started with and a remnant of energy.

"You find a southern or western cracker now and then with a good New England name. There was an early New England emigration to the south. I met out in the mountains of Missouri a cracker who was a direct descendant of the old provincial governor of Massachusetts, Endicott. He bore the family name and had a trace of the New Englander in his face, though he could neither read nor write. He had, however, his grandfather's diploma from Harvard college. The grandfather had removed to North Carolina, and part or perhaps all of the family had drifted west and finally reached Missouri. The crackers had a way of traveling along the mountain valleys from state to state, and a good many went into Tennessee and Georgia."—New York Sun.

Brave Sepoys and Sikhs.

The siege had lasted altogether 46 days, and there had been 39 men killed and 62 wounded. The sepoys had suffered greatly from want of food, as to eat horseflesh like the officers would have been against their creed, and the ghi had long run out. They had only half rations of flour, and when the relief came, they were weak and emaciated from want of food and sleep, but their endurance and pluck were most admirable. The sikhs especially showed extraordinary nerve. The worse the outlook the cheerier they grew. They would sit all day cleaning their rifles, with a quiet smile, as though the anticipation of defeat had never entered their mind. They felt sure, they said, that the government would not desert them and that in due time help would come. As one of them tersely put it, "The arm of the government is slow, but it reaches very far." Indeed, no praise can be too great for the Sikhs, who were the very backbone of the defense. They not only endured hardship and privation without a murmur, but they fought with a quiet, dignified courage that in itself inspired confidence.—"The Chitral Campaign," by Thompson.

Amputation.

Dr. A. Pearce Gould, one of the highest medical authorities in England, has recently said that surgeons amputate less frequently now than formerly. The science of medicine has made such progress that the knife is rarely used. The old days of cut and slash are over. Amputation, says Dr. Gould, is a confession of failure, a therapeutic tragedy. Dental science has also made long strides. I can remember a time when if a man had a single tooth ache the tooth was immediately yanked out. But nowadays dental skill is concentrated in saving every tooth in the head. The world moves, and you have to strike a good gait to keep up with it.—New York Herald.

The Ready Answer.

A Pittsburg little girl, who was very fond of the inside of cream puffs, but who did not care for the crust, was carefully removing the latter the other evening at dessert, when her mamma said:

"What are you doing, dear?"

"Peelin my cweam puff," was the reply.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

THE POTENT PEANUT.

ONE WOULD HARDLY THINK THE HUMBLE GOOBER SO IMPORTANT.

About Four Million Bushels Raised In This Country Every Year—The Most Nutritious and by Far the Cheapest of Foods—Substitute For Olive Oil.

But little is known of the peanut outside of localities in which it is grown, and even where it is most largely grown its possibilities are for the most part not at all realized, and it is not by any means made to yield the highest results it is capable of. Taking into account all its sources of value, the peanut ought to be one of the most profitable of the general farm crops in the south. The following facts about it are in the main condensed from a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture prepared by R. B. Handy of the office of experiment stations.

The yearly production of peanuts in this country is about 4,000,000 bushels of 22 pounds, the bulk of the crop being produced in Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina. These 4,000,000 bushels, while fully supplying the present demand of the United States, constitute but a small part of the peanut crop of the world, as the exportation from Africa and India in 1892 amounted to nearly 400,000,000 pounds, of which 222,000,000 pounds went to Marseilles for conversion into oil.

The largest part of the American crop is sold by street venders, but small amounts are used by confectioners, chocolate manufacturers and for the manufacture of oil. Peanut oil is used for lubricating and soapmaking and is a good substitute for olive oil for salads and other culinary purposes and as a substitute for lard and cottolene and butter in cooking. The residue from oil-making, known as "peanut cake," is a highly valued cattle food in the countries of Europe and is also ground into fine flour and used as human food. It makes good soup, griddle cakes, muffins, etc., and is one of the most nutritive of foods. The vines, when dried, become a very nutritive hay, readily eaten by stock, though requiring care in the feeding lest it produce colic.

The present uses of the peanut and its products are likely to be greatly extended and new channels of utility found for it, as has been the case with cotton seed. With better methods of tillage and a larger yield per acre the cost of production could be greatly lessened. According to the eleventh census, the average yield of peanuts in the United States in 1889 was 17.6 bushels per acre, the average in Virginia being about 20 and in Tennessee 32 bushels per acre. This appears to be a very low average, especially as official and semi-official figures give 50 or 60 bushels as an average crop, and 100 bushels are not an uncommon yield.

While the peanut has been cultivated in the United States to a limited extent for a number of years, it is only since 1866 that the crop has become of primary importance in the eastern section of this country, which seems peculiarly adapted to its production. Between 1865 and 1870 the rapid spread of the culture of peanuts was phenomenal. Each year doubled and at times increased threefold its crop over that of the preceding year, so that this country, from being a large importer of west African nuts, was soon able to supply the domestic demand with the home raised article.

Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee produce a large part of the peanut crop of the United States. Within the last few years this crop has ceased to be as profitable as heretofore. The method of culture—the annual planting of nuts on the same land, the lack of proper rotation of crops, the complete removal of all vegetation from the land and the failure to replenish the soil by means of fertilizers—has been a great factor in reducing the profits of the crop by reducing the ability of the land to produce such crops as were previously secured in that section, so that now instead of an average of 50 bushels per acre, with frequent yields of over 100 bushels, the average in the peanut sections is not over 20 bushels, while the cost of cultivation has been but slightly reduced.

As regards food value, peanut kernels, with an average of 29 per cent of protein, 49 per cent of fat and 14 per cent of carbohydrates in the dry material, take a high rank and should be classed with such concentrated foods as soja beans, cotton seed, etc. The vines are shown by analysis to be superior to timothy hay as a feeding stuff and but slightly inferior to clover hay.

The ground hulls are used to a considerable extent as a coarse fodder in European countries. Peanut meal, the ground residue from oil extraction, is a valuable feeding stuff highly appreciated and extensively used in foreign countries. It contains, as the averages of over 2,000 analyses show, about 52 per cent of protein, 8 per cent of fat and 27 per cent of carbohydrates and is one of the most concentrated feeding stuffs with which we are familiar, ranking with cottonseed meal, linseed meal, etc., and in some cases ahead of them.

In describing the uses of peanuts it is scarcely necessary to more than refer to the use to which fully three-fourths of the American raised crop is devoted. The nut is sorted in the factory into four grades, the first, second and third being sold to venders of the roasted peanut either directly or through jobbers, while the fourth is sold to confectioners to be used in the making of "burnt almonds," peanut candy and the cheaper grades of chocolates. The extent of the use of the peanut by the American people will be more fully appreciated when it is remembered that they use 4,000,000 bushels of nuts yearly, at a cost to the consumers of $10,000,000, which do not form a part of the regular articles of food, but are eaten at odd times.—Boston Herald.

TO PROTECT NEW YORK.

Four Steel Turrets to Be Erected on Romer Shoal.

Naval men are wondering which would fare the worse, in event of hostilities between John Bull and Uncle Sam, the great cities on the big lakes or the seaport towns. There is a unanimous belief, and it has been freely expressed of late, that not one of the large cities on the Atlantic coast is even moderately well protected from assault by Great Britain, and the same can be said of the lake cities. Not only are the defenses weak, but there is a lack of modern guns at all of the cities.

The new defenses for New York spoken of comprise four steel turrets to stand upon the Romer shoal. The site is peculiarly suitable for defensive purposes. It lies on a line between Sandy Hook and Coney Island light, a little nearer the former than the latter. The shallower parts of the shoal extend about a mile and a half on a northwest and southeast line, with a varying width of from one-quarter to one-half a mile, within which limits the average depth of water at low tide is about nine feet, although in spots it shallows to three or four feet.

On a line running about east-northeast and west-southwest, across Romer shoal, according to this design, four steel turrets are to be set up. The old method of building a foundation in shallow water by throwing down loose rock and then placing concrete blocks on top of this rip-rap work will probably not now be adopted. It is expected that steel piling will be sunk to take the weight of the forts, and these piles will then be connected by steel plates until the water can be pumped out. Ample space below the lowest tide level will thus be secured for machinery, magazines and quarters.

PROPOSED STEEL TURRET.

Upon solid foundations will then be erected sloping barbettes, above which will be revolving turrets. The backing of both barbettes and turrets will be much more solid than that which can be given to similar defenses on board ship, and there is every probability that the forts will be absolutely invulnerable to the heaviest ordnance mounted on any ship of war. As the barbettes must extend several feet below the lowest low water mark, and also several feet above the highest high water mark, it is proposed to face them with cement so applied as to protect the metal from the corrosive action of the salt water.

Each turret will have its own revolving machinery. The thickness of the armor plate will be determined by the relative status of armor and the gun at the time when the forts are ready for their steel protection, and, to a certain extent, the caliber and length of gun will be dependent upon that relative status. It is to be expected, however, that the four forts will contain eight of the most powerful pieces that can be made.

New Shoplifters' Skirt.

This is a picture of the newest thing in skirts for professional shoplifters. It was found on Mrs. Passo, from France, who was arrested in a New York dry-goods store. The dotted lines indicate slits in the skirt, which are dexterously concealed by folds in the material. These slits open into capacious pockets extending from waistband to hem.

Paderewski's Joke.

The other day when Paderewski was dining at a hotel in Richmond, Va., a fine nickel-plated banjo was sent in by a local banjo player, with the request that the great pianist should write a short musical sentiment on the sheepskin head. Paderewski complied with the request, and this is the sentiment to which he attached his signature: "I have not the pleasure of being a performer on this beautiful instrument; am only a piano player." Now the banjo player is asking his friends if the virtuoso was "jollying" him.

Miss Alcott's View.

In a book of reminiscences of Concord thirty years ago, by Frank Stearns, just published, the author relates how Miss Alcott came to him one day, and asked him to take her out rowing. He complied, but he found it more of a job than he had anticipated.

"This is the darnedest boat I ever pulled," he remarked.

"Frank," said Miss Alcott, "never say darn. Much better to be profane than vulgar."

Form good habits, and you will find them as hard to break as bad habits.

THE LOAF OF BREAD.

SUPERSTITIONS OF MANY LANDS CONNECTED THEREWITH.

Origin of the Signing of the Cross—What a Crack Across the Loaf Means—The Oven a Sacred Object—Omens Relating to Birth, Marriage and Death.

One morning last summer, when I was spending a few days at a farmhouse in eastern Ohio, the good housewife showed that she was troubled. Naturally I inquired the cause. "Oh," she said, "I'm afraid something dreadful will happen. This morning I put a batch of bread into the oven, and all the loaves except one cracked across the top."

"What if they did?" I replied in tones of curiosity.

"Don't you know," she said, with an air of surprise, "that when bread cracks across the top it means misfortune to some one in the family? I would not have had it happen for the world."

As I left a few days after this mishap to the bread I never learned whether the sign was a true omen or not. However, the housewife had contributed to my stock of information and had given me an item of folklore that led to further investigation.

One of my German friends tells me that in many parts of his native country the housewife still believes that cracks on the top of the loaf of bread indicate the death of some one in the household, or perhaps misfortune to a dear friend, while cracks on the lower side of the bread are taken to indicate a birth.

As many of us know, our bakers mark the sign of a cross upon the dough before placing it in the oven. The reason for making this sign becomes plain when we know the origin of the custom. Almost all our superstitions about bread date back to old pagan days, though they have been greatly modified so as to conform to Christian beliefs. With the ancient Romans the baking of bread and cakes was often invested with a religious significance, especially the cakes offered to the gods and goddesses. These cakes were prepared in a particular way, and after being marked with the symbol of the deity in whose honor they were offered they were supposed to possess supernatural virtues.

The old domestic practice was modified when Christianity became triumphant, and in place of a pagan symbol the early Christian housewife not only used to make the sign of the cross when she began to knead the dough, but she marked that sign upon her loaf before placing it in the oven. Why? Simply because the sign of the cross is the recognized Christian protecting mark against the attacks of evil spirits, witches and the like. Hence bread marked with the cross is supposed to be witchproof, will bake all right, not crack across the top, etc.

Just as the Jews have passover cakes and other peoples have had specially prepared food for their religious festivals, so the Christians have cakes for certain seasons. Our hot cross buns on Good Friday are simply modern representatives of the cakes used at some old pagan festival. In days gone by the cakes and buns baked at Easter were supposed to possess great virtues. Thus it is an old belief that the observance of eating cross buns on Good Friday insures, so to speak, the house from fire for the coming year.

In truth, to study the superstitions about bread is to take a wide lesson in folklore. These superstitions relate to the kneading trough, the oven, bakers and bread. For instance, in many parts of France the arche, or kneading trough, is more than a rude kitchen utensil. It is often a pretty bit of furniture. M. Sebillot, who has collected many of the superstitions of the French folk relative to bread, quotes the story of a thief who entered the window of a house with intent to commit burglary, but refused to step on the trough still containing the dough, believing that to do so would be an impiety.

A writer in one of the recent numbers of an English magazine says that in Gottland the cross is still signed before the oven fire is lighted or the dough kneaded. This practice is very common in the country districts all over Europe. In Brittany the housewife makes the sign of the cross with the right hand while she places the left hand in the trough. After the dough is kneaded, the lid of the trough is shut, and so is the door, for if the cat should enter the room the bread would not rise. Certain charms or invocations are used to cause the bread to multiply itself. Thus the peasant housewife adjures the dough to imitate the leaven, the wheat the miller and to rise. She would be very angry if any one should sing or whistle in the room while she is making the loaf.

In some parts of Europe the bake oven is almost a sacred object. In certain places of Brittany, for example, it is dedicated with ceremonies. The wood is sprinkled with blessed water. The proper heat is attested by the melting of a bottle, and finally an egg is broken for luck. Besides there are certain days on which bread must not be baked, as on Holy Friday or during the night of All Saints, when the ghosts would be sure to eat it.

The loaf of bread itself is connected with a whole crowd of superstitions. A long time resident in France informs me that the custom of marking the bread with the sign of the cross before cutting it is very general. Sometimes the first mouthful of bread is used to make this sign. According to an old English superstition, if a loaf accidentally parts in the hand while an unmarried lady is cutting it this may be taken to indicate either that she will not be married during the next 12 months, or, what is worse, that there will be dissensions of some kind in the family. Some folks have a fear of turning a loaf upside down after cutting it. Of course it is everywhere regarded as bad luck for a piece of bread to fall on the buttered side.—New York Post.

SWEET JASMINE.

How This Fragrant Flower Became the Symbol of Marriage.

Long before orange blossoms became associated with weddings the fragrant jasmine was commonly used for the decoration of a bride. A very pretty legend of ancient Tuscany tells how this little blossom became the symbol of love. A traveler, returning from the warm countries of Asia, brought home with him a rare tropical plant—the jasmine—which was unknown in Tuscany. He gave a small slip to a certain duke, who set it among his most treasured plants, where it rooted and thrived under the care of the gardener and soon grew to be a good sized plant. The duke was so proud of his rare possession that he gave strict orders to his gardener to guard the plant carefully and on no account to give even a slip—not a flower—to any person.

The gardener was a good young man, and he would have been faithful to his charge had he not happened to fall in love with the sweetest peasant maid in all Tuscany. The maid was poor and her lover was not much richer, so they were unable to marry. On the birthday of the peasant the gardener, having nothing else to give the maid of his choice, presented her with a bouquet of flowers, and among the other clippings in the bunch there was one from the duke's cherished jasmine bush. Nothing could be too good for the gardener's maiden, so in this one instance he relaxed his care of the shrub. The girl, admiring the fresh buds of the sprig, wished to preserve it, and so placed it in the ground, where it rooted and remained fresh and green all winter, thus symbolizing her love for the gardener, and in the following spring it grew and was covered with blossoms. The little bush flourished and the flowers multiplied so under the maiden's care that she was able to sell many of the sprigs for a considerable sum, thus spreading the unknown flower abroad; and in a short time, with a spray of the precious love token on her breast she was wedded to the happy gardener.

To this day the Tuscan girls preserve the remembrance of the gardener's gift to his sweetheart by wearing a nosegay of sweet jasmine on their wedding day, and they have a proverb which says a young girl wearing such a sprig is rich enough to make the fortune of a poor husband.—Philadelphia Press.

Cardinal Mezzofanti's Memory.

Cardinal Mezzofanti had a memory little short of miraculous. Dr. Russell, his biographer, says that the cardinal spoke with the greatest ease 30 languages; that he spoke fairly well 9; that he used occasionally, but not with any fluency, 11 more; that he spoke imperfectly 8, and that he could read 11 more. Taking in addition the number of dialects he used, some so diverse from the mother tongue as to constitute a different language, Dr. Russell says that the cardinal was master of no less than 111 different languages and dialects.

His German was so excellent that he was taken for a native of Germany, while his French and English were equally pure. Dr. Tholuck heard him converse in German, Arabic, Spanish, Flemish, English, Latin, Greek, Swedish and Portuguese, at one of the pope's receptions, and afterward Mezzofanti gave him a poem in Persian and left him to take a lesson in Cornish. He knew several of the American Indian languages and nearly all the dialects of India.

In spite of all these attainments, however, he was a very dull man, and himself said that he had 20 words for one idea. He was remarkable only for the number of languages he knew, but was not distinguished as a grammarian, a lexicographer, a philosopher, a philologist or ethnologist, and added nothing to any department of the study of language.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Imperfect Gold Coin.

Superintendent Beach of the street cleaning department some time since found a $5 gold coin on a curbstone, and it proved to be a curiosity, worth as much as two ordinary $5 pieces, on account of its having been "miss struck"—that is, it had not been placed squarely in the die, and the milling on one side was some distance from the edge, while on the other side there was none. On mentioning the fact to an employee in the San Francisco mint he was told that the coin was a counterfeit, and that it was practically impossible that a coin so disfigured could have been issued from any government mint. When the coin was produced, the mint employee, after putting it to all sorts of tests, had to admit that it was a genuine coin, struck at the Philadelphia mint, where every coin passes through the hands of four persons who examine it for defects, and he said he would not have believed it possible for such a coin to escape them had he not seen it.—Portland Oregonian.

Declining Our Pronouns.

In a collection of the possessions of the late Robert Louis Stevenson there is a letter showing the difficulties which even such a master of English as he experienced in writing our language. "When I invent a language," he writes, "there shall be a direct and indirect pronoun differently declined, and then writing will be some fun." This idea he illustrates as follows:

Direct—He, him, his.

Indirect—Tu, tum, tus.

He adds in exemplification, "He seized tum by tus throat, but tu at the same moment caught him by his hair." A fellow would write hurricanes with an inflection like that.—Boston Herald.

Guest—Why don't you smash those dishes?

Waitress—They fine us for smashing dishes here.

Guest—Well, if I ran the place, I'd fine you for not smashing them.—Detroit Free Press.

WHY THE SEA IS SALT

IT HAS BEEN SO EVER SINCE THE CREATION OF THE WORLD.

Of Great Benefit to Mankind—Continents Produced by the Skeletons of Animals That Could Not Have Lived In Fresh Water—Moses' Short Account.

The sea at present contains 90,000,000,000,000,000 tons of salt. If this salt could be gathered in a solid form and compressed into the shape of a cube, it would contain 10,173,000 cubic miles. Each edge of such a cube would measure somewhat more than 200 miles. This is enough to cover all the land on this globe with a uniform layer of salt to a depth of 1,000 feet.

This statement as to the saltiness of the sea is interesting enough in itself, but it is also suggestive. The questions may well be asked, Where did all this salt come from, and what is the use of it? Several scientific gentlemen have attempted to answer this first question, and their efforts are not entirely satisfactory. The second question is not so difficult.

According to the history of the creation of the world, as told by Moses in the Genesis, it is implied that the ocean existed before the land, for, on the "third day" the "water under the heavens" was gathered together and the dry land appeared.

This statement has bothered a great number of able philosophers, who, in their effort to stick to the letter of the Scripture and at the same time to reason out everything on perfectly natural principles, have been puzzled to know how such a grand transformation could be accomplished in one day. And their perplexity was not relieved when learned geologists announced that it must have required ages for the waters that enveloped the earth to subside and reveal this land that lay beneath.

But when it was suggested that the word "day" as used by Moses meant, not a period of 24 hours, but an era of thousands of years, the difficulty was removed. This meaning of the word "day" is at present generally accepted by devout scientists, who now declare that there is nothing impossible in Moses' account of the creation.

This description, to be sure, is lamentably brief. It was hardly adequate to pass over such a huge event as the creation of a world in a few lines. That was a big story from a newspaper point of view, and all thoughtful persons must acknowledge that Moses did not take advantage of his opportunity.

Accepting the Mosaic account, Dr. T. S. Hunt, a learned writer on the physical history of the globe, supplies what Moses left out, and in so doing he gives a very good reason for the presence of the salt in the sea. Having arrived at the point of Moses' meager narrative where the earth was in a molten state and surrounded by an envelope of gases and of water vapor, Dr. Hunt says:

"The carbonates, chlorides and sulphates (chemical combinations of carbon, chlorine and sulphur with oxygen) were changed into silicates. The carbon, chlorine and sulphur, being thus freed from the oxygen, separated in the form of acid gases. These, with nitrogen, vapor of water and a probable excess of oxygen, formed the atmosphere, which was very dense (and also very unhealthy).

"The surface of the earth was covered with lumps of molten rock (probably resembling furnace slag). The depressed parts of the surface were filled with highly heated solutions of hydrochloric and sulphuric acids, which ate into the surface and decomposed it. In this way the silicates were changed to pure silica, taking the form of quartz as the atmosphere cooled, and the condensation of the vaporous atmosphere produced sea water, holding in solution salts of sodium, calcium, magnesium and ammonium. The atmosphere, thus freed of its noxious elements, became pure and fit for man."

It is therefore evident that the sea has been salty from the creation of the world. The salt does not come, as is generally supposed, from friction of the water against salt "rocks" in the bed of the ocean. This, then, answers the first question. Where did the salt come from? The second question is pretty well answered by Mr. G. W. Littlehales in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

"It seems," he says, "that the sea was made salt in the beginning as a part of the grand design of the Creator to provide for the system of evolution which has been going on since the creation. Many distinct species of living organisms exist in the sea as a result of its salinity, and their remains have largely contributed to the growth of continents."

The minute creatures that have lived in the sea for ages past have left enduring monuments in the shape of islands, rocks and continents. If the sea had not been salty, these marine animals could not have existed and secreted the hard substance known as a "calcareous skeleton," which has largely contributed to the growth of continents. Among these early inhabitants of the sea were corals, crinoids, sea urchins and starfishes.

The saltiness of the sea has also much to do with the ocean currents, which distribute the heat of the tropics over the colder regions of the earth. Currents are largely due to the difference between the specific gravity of sea water and the fresh water of rains. Thus, when rain falls on a certain part of the ocean, the effort of the heavier salt water of the ocean to establish an equilibrium causes a current.—New York World.

Chevalier Bayard.

The famous Chevalier Bayard, who is held up in all the histories and romances as a model of chivalry, was greatly opposed to the use of firearms, and always ordered his troops to put captured musketeers to death without mercy, as practicing a form of warfare entirely uncivilized and unlawful.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY APRIL 10 .....1896

"The funds are short, is the significant headline to an article in the Weekly Echo of March 26th. It is stated upon the authority of Auditor Hayden, that the county and contingent funds in the treasury will be exhausted this month, so that for the next three months, constables, justicys, jurors and witnesses will have to go hungrier than hoboes and the servants of the people at the court will be without ice and lemons. The only remedy suggested is the transfer of the salary fund to the general fund. Mr. Hayden has overlooked another danger which menaces the county treasury, beside which the ever increasing, ravenous demands of township officers and tramps are microscopic. The great cattle king who is yet the surviving partener, not content with looting the treasury of Fresno, Madera, Merced and Stanislaus counties, is now, through skilful agents, at the head of a raid on our treasury. He and his pals only want thirty thousand dollars. Their program is to have thirty thousand dollars transferred from the county fund into the "swamp land" fund, and then have it paid to them upon stale claims, against which the county is entitled to protection by the lapse of more than twenty years; claims yellow with age and buried in the cobwebs of the statutes of limitation. All these people want is the advent of enough money into the county fund. Their agents have taken the contract to have the supervisors, the district attorney and the treasuror the staleness of the fraudulent claims on the quiet. Already Treasurer Batz has given up several thousands, and the precedent is relied upon by the bandits engagen in the. Have the people of the people of the county enough influence with their servants to stop the robbery. —Kern Standard.

Why has the Rothchilds combination had Congressman Loud introduce a bill to exclude pamphlets and serial publications from second class mail matter? Because the authors and readers of such literature are unable to pay book postage and the falsehoods of the subsidized press can only be exposed through pamphleteering, which has been the method employed by the people of England in every contest for the last three hundred years between the despotism of the crown and the rights of the people. Pamphleteering, led by Thomas Paine, made the American Revolution possible. Pamphleteering freed the slave.. Pamphleteering to day is educating the people to repudiate the Rothchilds gold conspiracy of contraction and death. The Rothchilds can afford to spend money to stop pamphleteering. Coin's Financial School and Shylock have alarmed the rascals and call attention to the flood of light which the thousands of pamphlets of patriotic reformers is shedded upon the dark and mysterious ways of English money-stranglers and their Tory tools in this country, who are robbing the American people of their property and their most sacred rights.—[Silver Knight Watchman.

It is very wisely said that the gold dollar is a true measure of value, because it is always worth 100 cents. A hundred cents in what? we ask. Why, a hundred cents in gold we are answered. So the statement amounts to just this: A gold dollar is a true measure because it is always worth a gold dollar. In other words it is always equal to itself. So is anything else always equal to itself. The material point is, how much of other things is the gold dollar worth? That is the test and the only test. It has already been shown that the gold dollar, measured by commodities and property generall, is worth about twice as much as it was twenty years ago.

There was never such a prospect for a fruit crop in Tulare county as there is today. It is not at all unlikely that twenty times as much fruit will be shipped out of Visalia this season as was ever shipped in one season before. This will mean the employment of an immense number of people during the fruit season, and the circulation of a large amount of money. A good rain to help the grain growers would make the outlook exceedingly encouraging for every industry in this county.—[Tulare County Times.

An exchange has discovered a fellow so cranky on the silver question that he digs up all the golden-rod and marigolds on his place, grows only white corn, won't speak to his wife because she has golden hair, is forever denouncing the gold cure, won't keep the golden rule, and doesn't want to enter the golden gates.

A gentleman who is now at Cripple Creek writes to the Rhoneville Herald that he is of the opinion that the mines there will go down with a crash. He admits the existence of several rich mines, but says there are at present 30,000 people in the district and only about 600 miners at work.

Boston is about to make an experiment in high liquor license. Sixty hotels will be called on to pay $2,000 each instead of $1,500 as formerly, and the tax of retail dealers will be $1,000 each These are said to be highest licenses yet required in this country.

When the savages of Central Africa spear a hundred whites it is a terrible massacre, but when British soldiesrs shoot down a thousand negroes it is the suppression of an uprising, which has the merit of being rhetorically correct.

A law powerful enough to withstand the "poll" and literally close saloons all over New York yesterday, shows how times are changing.—[S. F., Post.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

BARNYARD MANURE.

Important Conditions Which Determine Its Value—How It Is Best Applied.

Barnyard manure is the most important manurial resource of the farm. In many cases the value of the manure obtained in cattle feeding represents largely if not entirely the profit of feeding.

The amount and value of manure produced by different kinds of farm animals may be judged from the following figures, calculated to 1,000 pounds of live weight: Sheep, 34.1 pounds of manure per day, worth 7.2 cents; calves, 67.6 pounds, worth 6.7 cents; pigs, 83.6 pounds, worth 16.7 cents; cows, 74.1 pounds, worth 8 cents, and horses, 48.8 pounds, worth 7.6 cents, basing calculations of value on market prices of commercial fertilizers.

The urine is the most valuable part of the excreta of animals. It is rich in nitrogen and potash, but deficient in phosphoric acid. It should, as a rule, be used in connection with the solid dung, the one thus supplying the deficiencies of the other and making a more evenly balanced manure.

Barnyard manure is a very variable substance. The conditions which determine its value are age and kind of animal quantity and quality of food, proportion of litter and method of management and age. In a given class of animals the value of the manure is determined more by the nature of the food than by any other factor. The amounts of fertilizing constituents in the manure stand in direct relation to those in the food. As regards the value of manure produced, the concentrated feeding stuffs, such as meat scrap, cottonseed meal, linseed meal and wheat bran stand first, the leguminous plants (clover, peas, etc.) second, the grasses third, cereals (oats, corn, etc.) fourth and root crops, such as turnips, beets and mangel wurzels, last.

The deterioration of manure results from two chief causes—fermentation and leaching. The former may be almost entirely prevented by the use of absorbants and preservatives, such as gypsum, superphosphate and kainit and by keeping the manure moist and compact. Loss from leaching may be prevented by storage under cover or in pits. Extremes of moisture and temperature are to be avoided, and uniform and moderate fermentation is the object to be sought. To this end it is advisable to mix the manure from the different animals thoroughly in the heap.

When practicable, it is best to apply manure in the fresh condition. If improvement of the mechanical condition of the soil is the object sought, fresh manure is best for this purpose to heavy soils and well rotted manure to light soils. Where prompt action of the fertilizing constituents is desired the best results will probably be obtained by applying fresh manure to the light soils, although excessive applications should be avoided on account of the danger of "burning out" of the soil in dry seasons. Fresh manure has a forcing effect and is better suited to grasses and forage plants than to plants grown for seed, such as cereals. Direct applications to root crops, such as sugar beets, potatoes or tobacco, often prove injurious. The manure should be spread when carried to the field and not left in heaps to leach. One of the best ways to utilize barnyard manure is to combine it with such materials as supplement and conserve its fertilizing constituents. The best results are likely to be obtained by using commercial fertilizing materials in connection with barnyard manure, either in compost or separately. As is well known, barnyard manure is lasting in its effects, and in many cases need not be applied so frequently as the more soluble and quick acting superphosphates, potash and nitrogen salts, etc.—Farmers' Bulletin.

The Farmers' Institutes.

The season for farmers' institutes is here. Of all plans yet tried Wisconsin's is probably the most successful. There the work is under the direction of the college of agriculture, with a competent superintendent in charge. In some states the state board of agriculture has control, while in others a certain sum is given each county society which is used for institute purposes. But in many places this work, if accomplished at all, must be pushed by a few of the leaders in the community. While it is well to rely largely upon home talent, the best interests of the farmers' institute demand a few speakers from abroad, says American Agriculturist, which advises a short session full of brief pointed papers and free enthusiastic discussion.

Changing Seed Corn.

The introduction of seed from a different locality has often been followed by increased yields, and it is considered good practice to make a change occasionally. However, where the seed corn is carefully selected each season, the same variety can be used successfully for a great many years. Numerous instances are on record where instead of "running out" the same variety grown continuously on the same farm has yielded heavier and become better in almost every respect. Plant only the most vigorous seed from the earliest and best ears is advice that every progressive farmer gives.

Destroying Weeds by Electricity.

Not only has electricity been found serviceable for weed destruction, but the cost is much less than when done by hand labor. With electricity five miles of weeds can be killed in an hour at a very small expense. A brush heavily charged with electricity runs along about eight inches above the ground, and every weed with which it comes in contact, however big and strong, is immediately killed and turns black, as if frozen.

A New Thing In Books.

It has been suggested that the contrast between the black and white of a printed page would be less trying to the eye if the latter could simultaneously rest on a bit of color. Accordingly a Boston publisher is getting out books that have margins of azure, yellow or green.—Boston Letter.

WHAT IS YOUR ROTATION?

Is It Adapted to Your Soil, Climate and Your Markets?

There is room for divergence of opinion as to what rotation is the most profitable, but in most sections good farmers have rotations especially adapted to their own farms. These may be short or long, and usually in any country or section the older the country the longer the rotation. Almost all farmers everywhere have a rotation such as this: Corn, and oats and then corn, or corn, oats and wheat, and then corn. Others again have corn, oats, wheat, meadow, pasture and then corn. In many sections of this country this is not a bad one, but a writer in the Iowa Homestead points out the fact that a rotation is not a good one unless it provides for the maintenance of soil fertility, and he knows of no country in which this has been done without the use of the legumes, such as clover, beans or peas. He says:

In sections where either fall or spring wheat grows well, and where stock growing and feeding is one of the main features of the farm, the rotation of corn or rye, oats, spring or fall wheat, clover and timothy for meadow, then pasture one to two years, and then back to corn, is a very desirable one. It provides in corn a hoed crop, or, we should rather say a cultivated crop of large yield, has an abundance of vegetable matter in the form of clover, which is the best of all crops to turn under when the corn ground is to be plowed, and yields to the farm crop following all. Beyond this it fits in well with the corn and wheat, and it enables farmers to keep up the fertility of their farms for years from 10 to 25 years.

Oats can then be sown without plowing, and, as a rule, to better advantage without plowing than with it. When wheat is a profitable crop in ordinary years, plowing may then be done, and wheat is next to follow. It is a question if it is not better to plow under the sod for a crop of winter wheat. This seems, in fact, to be the best hoed crop for the grass, leaving a stand for grass or clover, as the weed seeds treated by the plow finish an excellent crop of hay, and, if Clover predominates, a crop of seed. When thus plowed in late fall with clover it is best to back to corn after a clover seed crop, thus making a short four years' rotation, but where there is a pasture especially fenced by itself, the rotation is to be corn, timothy and pasture one or two years before going back to corn.

Potatoes in Succession.

There are other reasons besides the danger of propagating the potato disease why it is not best to plant potatoes two succeeding years on the same land. Explains American Cultivator: The great necessity for a large potato crop is an ample supply of moisture in the soil. In spring we recommend this as a clover ley plowed early enough in spring to get the advantage of late spring rains. It is true that when clover is allowed to grow to the spring there is a great mass of green herbage to be plowed under in late May or early June. But the moisture that is in the clover leaves has all been taken from the soil and much more, for the clover plant, with its broad leaves, exhales moisture rapidly, as any one who has plowed under a growth of clover in June well knows. Even as quickly as 48 hours after a very heavy rain heavy soil will often become hard to plow.

When clover is plowed so late, the soil often remains dry at the season if summer rains are light. The same cloverfield plowed in early spring will keep moist all summer. What clover there is rots quickly, and this keeps the soil loose, so that every rainfall sinks into it instead of running off. The soil where potatoes grew the year before either has better vegetable matter or the plowing is delayed so late for it to grow that much of its benefit for that year must be lost. This may prove to be one of the drawbacks to the advantages expected from sowing crimson clover to cover the soil in winter and be plowed under in spring for potatoes. There will be some profit, but it will not be as great as is commonly supposed.
